CIRCUMSTANCES LEADING TO AND CONNECTED WITH

THE

SETTLEMENT OF NEWARK,

BY W. A. WHITEHEAD.

MEMOIR.

TWO HUNDRED YEARS! The words are uttered with so little effort, so readily does the ear receive them, that the mind fails to realize, at once, their full significance. Two hundred years! Although in the long procession of the ages, during which the Universe has been moving onward in its mysterious circuit, the period may be scarcely appreciable—a mere point in the pathway of the untold centuries—yet who can estimate its vast proportions when regarded through the long vista of the every-day occurrences, and the individual experiences which have marked its passage; the joys and sorrows, the hopes and fears, the disappointments and successes, the trials, the projects of living, throbbing hearts; all the conflicting, yet strangely harmonizing, concomitants of the earthly existence of all those who have been born and lived and died during its continuance?

Such an occasion as this, therefore, is fraught with unusual interest, for we commemorate this day an event, which, two hundred years ago, like a stone dropped in an unruffled lake, set in motion in the great ocean of Time, the circling eddies of never ending results that, in their unbroken; never-ceasing undulations onward, have evolved, and now surround us here, to-day, with all we see of civilization and prosperity, and whose ultimate effects we can neither realize nor imagine. It is well, therefore, that we should turn our attention, for a brief period to the circumstances which preceded what was of such momentous import.

It was in the Spring of 1666 that two or more diminutive vessels, after carefully passing from the harbor of New York through the Kill van Kull, into what is now known as Newark bay, were to be seen ascending the Passaic as tide and wind permitted. Neither history nor tradition has preserved the names of these small craft; and we are uninformed as to the precise day of their arrival, but attendant circumstances indicate that it was in the beginning of May, old style, approaching sufficiently near to the day on which we are assembled, to render its selection appropriate for our commemorative services.

These vessels brought to New Jersey a small company of adventurous spirits, men of enterprise and industry, of intelligence and integrity, experienced in the management of public affairs, —God-fearing men. And women too were there, simple in their tastes and pursuits, loving and enduring, to whom it was home wherever the interests of fathers or husbands called them. The whole, a company associated and bound together less by the ties of nationality and consanguinity than by, to them, the stronger chain of a common religious faith, and a common sentiment of civil liberty to be enjoyed in subordination to that faith.

But leaving these vessels and their interesting freight for a while, let us review the circumstances which preceded and led to their arrival.

Although more than half a century had rolled away since the discovery of the country by Hudson, yet, strange as it may seem to us in these days of progress and indefinite expansion, the settlements of the Dutch, in what is now eastern New Jersey, were confined to the peninsula between the river that bears the discoverer's name and the Hackensack; for although we have recorded evidence of one attempt at a settlement somewhere within Newark bay in the year 1643,* yet the project was abandoned the ensuing year in consequence of the hostility of the Indians, and never resumed.† Consequently all the lands west of the Hackensack river, Newark bay, and the sound between Staten Island and the main, were unappropriated by Europeans down to 1665.

* N. Y. Dutch MSS. at Albany, Vol. IV, pp. 127, 128.

† Ibid, Vol. II, pp. 86, 87; IV, p. 234.

There had been several inquiries made, in relation to the privileges that might be expected by those who should renew the attempt to effect a settlement in "Achter Col"—as the Dutch at New Amsterdam then called this region, from its lying back of, or beyond the bay, south of Manhattan Island—but even these feeble indications of enterprise were not manifested until near the close of the Dutch domination. Thus in February (15th) and April (29th) 1661, a secret application from "a company of honest men," so called, of Huntington, Long Island, for liberty "to sit downe ther to make a plantation," was responded to on the 21st of June, by permission from the Dutch authorities, for them to visit and examine the lands prior to entering into any agreement for their occupancy;* but we have no information of any further proceedings in connection with the contemplated undertaking.

Later in the same year, however, another application was made from another quarter, which may be considered as the first step towards effecting the settlement here which we commemorate.

What is now the State of Connecticut consisted then of two colonies, Connecticut and New Haven. The former comprised the settlements at the mouth and on the banks of the Connecticut river, the latter included not only New Haven, proper, but also the towns of Milford, Branford, Guilford and Stamford in its vicinity, and the town of Southold on Long Island; but, of the two, Connecticut was the most prosperous.* When it is remembered that it was in New Haven that the regicides Whalley and Goffe were so cordially received and carefully concealed and guarded,† the announcement that republican views were in the ascendant in the colony will occasion no surprise; neither will the kindred facts that, the restoration of Charles II to the throne of England, in 1660, was exceedingly obnoxious to many of its people, and that, although they brought themselves to acknowledge him formally on the 21st of August, 1661, “to be the lawful King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, and all other territories thereto belonging,” great apprehensions of its effect upon the future of the colony were excited and bitter dissensions aroused by the event.‡

It was under these circumstances that the attention of some of the most prominent men of the New Haven colony was turned to the propriety of seeking, without delay, a location elsewhere more favorable to the exercise and dissemination of the civil and religious privileges they cherished, than might be looked for under monarchical and hierarchical rule. Although it has been said that the most strongly developed characteristic of the Englishman of that day—jealousy of the Dutch—blazed with peculiar malignity in New England*; yet the colonists of New Haven, as they cast their eyes over the continent in search of the asylum they desired, were not prevented by any feelings of the kind which they may have cherished, from recognizing that, within the domain of their neighbors on the South, and beneath the folds of Holland's standard of red, white and blue—prophetic colors—were both the land and the privileges they coveted.

On the 8th November, 1661, Matthew Gilbert, Deputy Governor of the Colony of New Haven, wrote from Milford to Governor Stuyvesant at New Amsterdam, informing him that, “ a Com-

“in the use of suitable means thorough the blessing of the Almighty be attained”—that this company, having been encouraged so to do by the courtesy extended by the Governor to persons appointed to visit “some adjacent parts” on a previous occasion, had appointed a committee of four of their most prominent men, at the head of which was Robert Treat, to confer with him relative to the terms upon which they might “begin to plant,” and thereafter, secure additions in those who might wish to join them “for the enlargement of the Kingdom of Christ Jesus in the Congregational way,” and secure “all other means of comfort and subordination thereunto.” In behalf, therefore, of the Committee, sundry propositions were submitted, for which, as they were from “true men and no spies,” a careful consideration was solicited with a view to a return of a definite answer to each.*

As these propositions exhibit in a clear light the principles upon which the fathers of our city based their hopes of success in their untried enterprise, let us give the substance of them our attention :

I. They proposed that, the church or churches they might establish, should be recognized as such by some public act on record, and be permitted to enjoy all the powers, privileges and liberties, "in the congregational way," that they had enjoyed in New England.

II. They desired the authority to convene Synods for the regulation of matters of common concernment, and that the Governor and court, at New Amsterdam, should protect the churches and synods thus formed, from all opposed to, or injurious to them.

III. They desired authority to regulate their civil affairs within themselves, to be allowed to choose their own magistrates, to establish courts, and to make such laws as they should find most advantageous and suitable to their condition. All planters and others while within their precincts to be required to acquiesce in and obey the laws thus enacted, without appeal to any other authority or jurisdiction. These privileges they had enjoyed in Connecticut under their grant from Charles I, and it was the more necessary that they should be continued under the domination of the Dutch, with whose language and laws they were unacquainted.

IV. They stipulated that the lands they might select should be freed from all claims of the Aborigines by full and absolute purchase.

V. They wished to have the sole power of disposing of their lands, and of receiving or rejecting all inhabitants, that none might be put upon them by the authorities; and, in all respects as to payment of dues and customs and privileges of trade, they wished to be placed upon a par with the Dutch.*

These propositions were favorably received by the Director General and his Council, and on the 28th of November, a formal answer to them, in part, was agreed to. Treat and his associates were informed that, so far as related to the religious privileges and liberties asked for, no objections were entertained "because," it was said, "there is no difference in the fundamental points "of the worship of God betwixt these [the "churches of the New Netherland] and the "churches of New England, but only in the "ruling of the same;" and "because in our "native country, and also here, was never practised restraint of consciences." Nor were any impediments that we would think of very serious magnitude, thrown in the way of a concession of the other rights for which they had stipulated. The only modifications suggested were: the requisition of an oath of fidelity to the government from all the inhabitants, the reservation for them of the right of appeal to the high court, and the prior approval of officers and magistrates; double nominations to be made from among themselves, and the selection left to the Director General and his Council.† Yet these restrictions, affecting as they did their free, unbiased choice of officers, and the reservation of the right of appeal from the decisions of their courts, were unpalatable, and for some months the projected emigration to the New Netherland appears to have slumbered.

The condition of things in the New Haven colony, however, was growing more and more unsatisfactory. The colony of Connecticut through the personal influence and active agency of John Winthrop, Jr., its Governor, had obtained in April, 1662, a royal charter, the territorial limits of which were made to include New Haven, without the knowledge and contrary to the wishes of the inhabitants.* This naturally excited great dissatisfaction, but there were also peculiar features in the instrument itself, and anticipated evils from a junction with Connecticut, which prompted a determined resistance to the loss of identity which the recognition of the charter involved. Connecticut admitted to the privileges of freemen all its inhabitants, whether church members or not, while New Haven had always confined those privileges to those who were content to enjoy them only "in the Congregational way." This fact alone tended to render submission to the charter impossible on the part of many, and there were also theological differences which were in the way of union.†

Again, therefore, were the thoughts and inclinations of the discontented turned southward. Robert Treat, this time attended by Philip Groves and John Gregory, towards the close of 1662 or the beginning of 1663, approached the Dutch authorities, reviving their former propositions and soliciting a more favorable response than before received, to those, of which modifications had been suggested. After several conferences with Stuyvesant and his Council, Gregory, who had remained behind to learn the result, was made the bearer of their decision under date of March 11th, 1663. They softened in some particulars their former requisition, as to the extent of the appeals to be allowed from the Town's tribunals, but still they insisted upon a retention of the right, as well as on their approval of magistrates "as a token of an acknowledgment to a higher authority."*

It is probable that the neighbors of those contemplating emigration did what they could to embarrass these negotiations.† Certain it is that we learn nothing more of them until, under date of June 29th, 1663, Treat (who may have had some intimation of their reception), enquired by letter about the instructions which Governor Stuyvesant might have received from his superiors in Holland in relation thereto. These had been communicated by the Directors of the West India Company under date of March 26th, 1663, and evince an earnest desire that the projected settlement might be made, "especially as it might serve as a "bulwark against the savages on the Raritan and "Minisink." They expressed a wish that the punishments for crimes differing from those common to the laws of the Father-land, should only be put in force by the settlers against their own countrymen; a point which the Governor was directed not to give up as long as it was tenable, it being of "too high importance;" but, say they, "if the object in view is not obtainable without "the sacrifice, then your Honor is authorized to "treat with the English on such terms as in "your opinion are best adapted to promote the "welfare of our State and its subjects."* Stuyvesant found the proposed restriction untenable and abandoned it, and in answer to Treat's letter, under date of 20th July, notified him of the renewal of the concessions granted two years previously, as to their first two propositions respecting their religious privileges, and that, as to their third requisition, they would be allowed free choice of their magistrates, but those chosen should be annually presented for confirmation and to renew their oaths. Their local laws, "being found to concur with the Holy Scriptures, should be confirmed," and their permanent laws should be binding upon all persons dwelling among them ; that no appeal should be allowed in criminal matters where parties were convicted on their own confession, "but in dark and dubious matters, especially in Witchcraft," sentences of death should not be put in execution without the approval of the Director General and his Council ; in civil matters the right of appeal to apply only to cases involving more than one hundred pounds. Their other stipulations were unqualifiedly granted, excepting that no inhabitants should be admitted but such as should take the oath of fidelity and be acceptable to the Dutch authorities.* It must be noticed that, throughout all these negotiations there was no wavering from their first enunciated principles on the part of Treat and his associates. Having determined upon what, in their estimation, was essential, —having fixed upon a standard of right, there was no room for concessions on their part ; and it is remarkable that they should have succeeded in procuring such favorable responses to their proposed terms, when it is considered what well founded apprehensions were then entertained in the New Netherland of the ultimate result of the aggressions of their English neighbors. It can only be accounted for by supposing that the republican sentiments of the applicants, and their deep-seated aversion to the rule of Charles, were known, and allowed to modify the feelings with which the colonies of New England generally were regarded. But notwithstanding all that was conceded to them, still did they linger. It was a difficult thing to sever ties which a quarter of a century had woven, connecting them with the rocks and hills and streams and meadows with which they were so familiar; but the attractions of neither land nor countrymen could withstand the influences at work to effect the separation. The dissensions between the colonies of Connecticut and New Haven had seriously affected the previously waning prosperity of the latter. Deeply in debt, disaffection with the government prevalent, the stated salaries of its officers, even, unpaid through inability to collect the taxes, a crisis in its affairs was certainly at hand.* Still the majority of its people resisted the union with Connecticut, until it was announced that the New Netherland had been granted by Charles II to the Duke of York. That event indicated in the future an unbroken ascendancy, in all the colonies, of the principles of government against which they had been struggling. Opposition longer was useless, its continuance impolitic and hazardous. The Milford people, led by Treat, at last acknowledged the authority of Connecticut, and influential individuals in other towns also severed their connection with New Haven, rendering it, eventually, a comparatively easy task to unite it with Connecticut, which was amicably effected on the 1st of May, 1665;* but Branford, inflexible in principle and firm in purpose, would have "neither part nor lot" in the matter, and rejected, as a community, the alliance.†

It was under these varying political relations and surrounded by these trying social vicissitudes, aggravating the ordinary labors and deprivations ever incidental to the condition of pioneers in a new land, that the future settlers of Newark were educated for their work; their training under such circumstances eliciting qualifications which enabled them so successfully to combat with the discouragements which they so often encountered; and hence the propriety of this reference to their previous experience.

It does not come within the scope of this Memoir to discuss the circumstances which led to the forcible subversion of the Dutch authority in the New Netherland, and the establishment of the English under the Letters Patent of Charles II to his brother; but it was an event which impressed peculiar and ever enduring characteristics upon the future of the district of country west of the Hudson. The news of the transfer reached Connecticut before Treat and his companions had fully resolved to leave, and the change likely to be wrought by the substitution of the monarchical system of England for the more liberal institutions of Holland, seems to have operated to postpone the step to a still later period; the ducal coronet worn by the King's grantee and his religious faith, did not promise anything specially favorable for the spread of republican principles and religious liberty, and it was doubtless with no slight disappointment that the plans, thought of and discussed for two years and more, were abandoned. But soon came rumors that other parties had secured the possession of the tract to which their attention had been directed; and shortly after the arrangement was perfected which, contrary to the will of many united New Haven to Connecticut, special messengers arrived with the authorized tidings that, beyond the Hudson was at last a secure refuge from oppression, an open field for the widest cultivation of their cherished principles, both in theory and practice.

On the 23d and 24th of June, 1664, only a few months subsequent to his reception of the Letters Patent from the King, and before the country had been conquered by the English fleet sent to put him in possession, the Duke of York, transferred what now constitutes New Jersey to Lords Berkley and Carteret. The two courtiers placed in this important relation to the province were doubtless led to look to its acquisition from being already interested in the settlement of Carolina, for which they, in conjunction with other prominent persons to whom Charles II was personally attached, had the year before obtained a grant directly from the crown, and their intimate associations with the Duke of York, rendered its acquisition easy. Sir John Berkley, Baron of Stratton, had been the governor of the Duke in his youth, and in subsequent years had been intimately associated with him, officially and otherwise, retaining great influence over him notwithstanding mental weakness and doubtful integrity. Sir George Carteret had been a firm adherent of Charles II,—as Berkley had been also—and at the restoration was placed in several important positions. He was ever an intimate companion of his brother, and both he and Berkley were connected with the Admiralty Board, at the head of which was the Duke. They thus enjoyed peculiar facilities for influencing him, which they seem to have employed for their pecuniary benefit in the manner indicated.

Philip Carteret, a relative of Sir George, having been appointed Governor, arrived from England in August, 1665, on board the ship Philip. On reaching New York he was informed that the Duke's Governor, Nicolls, before receiving intelligence of the transfer of New Jersey to Berkley and Carteret, had granted to a company from Long Island, a tract of land beyond Achter Col, and that they had already entered upon its possession. Thitherward, therefore, did Carteret turn the prow of his vessel, and found four families established at what is now Elizabeth, and took up his residence there with them.

Without delay the Governor despatched the messengers to New England who have been alluded to, to make known the fact that the fertile soil and salubrious climate of New Jersey, united with civil and religious privileges nowhere excelled, invited immigration. It was natural that the people of Milford, whose attention had been so long directed to the attractions which this district of country presented, should be led to listen readily to the terms of the "Concessions" containing the stipulations and guarantees of the Proprietors, by which they hoped to secure the settlement of their province. "Concessions!" how much there is in the word indicative of the change which time has wrought in the relations of the governed and the governors on this our western continent; then the people received and enjoyed what was conceded by those in power; now those in power exercise such authority as may be conferred upon them by the people and no more. Yet these "Concessions," as well as those which confirmed to the people of West Jersey the privileges they enjoyed, were of such a character, as has been very justly remarked of the Charter of Carolina,* “that it “must strike every reflecting mind with sur“prise, to behold a regular system of civil and “religious freedom thus established as the basis

 “of the provincial institutions, by the same “statesmen, who, in the parent country had “framed the intolerant act of uniformity and “were executing its provisions with the most “relentless severity.” But in New Jersey, as was said by Penn and his colleagues, a foundation was laid “for after ages to understand their “liberty as men and christians, that they may not “be brought in bondage but by their own con“sent; for we put the power in the people.” And how significant that clause in the early laws of West Jersey, “that each member of the Assem“bly, be allowed one shilling per day, during “the time of the sitting of the Assembly, that “thereby he may be known to be the servant of the “people.”† It has been suggested that “avarice paid its homage to freedom,”‡ by the adoption of such liberal institutions as were most likely to promote the settlement of their province. Were this the case, or, that a conviction of what were the rights of manhood had at last effected an entrance into the minds of Charles’ courtiers, certain it is that popular freedom to an extent then little known in the world was guarantied to the settlers of New Jersey by Berkley and Carteret.

A Committee consisting of Robert Treat and one or two other prominent men of Milford was despatched to New Jersey to satisfy the community that the picture presented did not derive its charms from the skilful tinting of avarice or craft. Unsuccessful attempts had been made, at different times, to plant an off-shoot of the New Haven Colony on the banks of the Delaware,* and it seems that the Milford committee first turned their steps thither, with the view of selecting a site near the present Burlington.† But not being pleased with what they saw in West Jersey, they returned and visited Governor Carteret at Elizabethtown, at whose suggestion they determined upon a location on the Passaic. It is said‡ that a formal agreement, comprising fifteen articles, was entered into, after a full discussion

* Palfrey's N. Engl'd, I, p. 600; N. H. Col. Rec., pp. 57, 106; Winthrop II, pp. 75, 91; Hazard's State Papers II, pp. 127, 192-195.

† This fact is stated in a MS. "Examination of the Claim of the Newark people" in my possession, written, it is presumed, about 1746, by Elisha Parker, one of the Proprietors' counsel, who in his margin states "this appears from Governor Carteret's Letter and Mem. Book." James Alexander, in a letter to Elisha Parker, in my possession, dated November 22d, 1745, says, "I am in great hopes that the books discovered

"by Mr. Ogden may give us a much clearer light into the proceedings about Elizabethtown in Carteret's time, than what we have, and, therefore, very probably, we may receive from them materials for sundry Amendments to the Elizabeth Town bill, and for that reason it should be delayed till these materials are well considered." This is thought to refer, in part, to the book above alluded to. Would that it were now extant.

of the provisions of the "Concessions," but the document is lost. The precise time of this interview is not known, but circumstances indicate that it took place in the Autumn or early Winter of 1665.

It would be interesting could we summon from the dim past the figures of these men, thus in conference upon matters so pregnant with results in future ages,—to scan their features,—to criticise their plans,—and, though last, not least, to listen to their desultory talk, when not discussing the topics more immediately connected with the purposes of the interview; but we have nothing to aid us in the attempt. No record of what passed has come down to us, excepting in reference to those purposes; and we have no knowledge of the personal appearance of either of the principal parties; for, notwithstanding the prominence of Treat in the public affairs of Connecticut, no "counterfeit presentment" of his form and features now exists, and we are equally at fault as regards the lineaments of the first Governor of New Jersey.

As to the subjects upon which they conversed, we may not be far wrong, if we imagine Treat inquiring with lively interest, about the stirring political events which had so engrossed the public mind in England during the immediately preceding years, the influence of which had been so sensibly felt even amid the rural hamlets of Connecticut; and also, as to what was known by his host of that dire distemper which was in the midst of its desolating march about the time of Carteret's departure from England. We can suppose him listening with wonder and awe to the recital of all which Carteret himself may have seen and heard—the portentous comet which was thought to have heralded the disease—the dread tones of the maniac who made London resound with his denunciations of “Wo to the rebellious city”—the startling cry of attendants on the dead-carts, as they perambulated the deserted streets, summoning the pent up inhabitants with “Bring out your Dead”! and various other circumstances, that made the occurrence of the Plague of 1665 an event in the world's history, never to be forgotten.

We may presume that, with equal interest did the Governor seek information from one who had been so actively engaged for several years in subduing the wilderness, as to the best modes of procedure, not only to master the obstacles which nature presented, but to overcome the greater impediments which the unruly wills of men were likely to interpose. For the first time too, was Carteret brought into contact with the aborigines, and how naturally must he have looked to Treat's personal experience for useful lessons to guide him in his intercourse with them.

Had there been a Mrs. Carteret present, we might readily conjecture certain topics that undoubtedly would have been introduced by her, if then, as now, household affairs intruded themselves, sometimes, upon the attention of both entertainers and entertained, in the most exclusive circles; for, what could have engaged her anxious thoughts more, on being transferred from populous London, the metropolis of the world, to the embryo settlement of four families at Elizabethtown in the wilds of America, than the problem "how should she, a Governor's wife, manage his establishment under such circumstances"—a problem for the solution of which she would naturally appeal to the experience of Treat. We might imagine too that her presence would naturally lead the conversation to the wife and children of her guest, and that, excited by the recollections of his home, Treat may have told the incident in his courtship, which tradition has preserved, that, when in the freedom of social intercourse and the hilarity of youth he had once held his future wife upon his knee, he was induced to take the decided step of proposing for her hand by being expostulated with in the suggestive language "Robert, be still that, I had rather be Treated than trotted."* But a Mrs. Carteret was not present, for the Governor was a bachelor and continued so for fifteen years thereafter; dying in less than two years after securing the hand of a blooming widow on Long Island.* Treat, however, was twice married, which may account for his adopting for his seal, the significant device of a heart transfixed by two arrows. But, returning from this digression, let us resume the narrative.

* Lambert's N. Haven, p. 137.

As the Concessions required all land to be taken up under a warrant from the Governor, and, as we have seen, Treat and his companions were equally decided in requiring an extinguishment of the Indian title prior to settlement, these mutual requirements were considered satisfactorily met, by Carteret's furnishing Treat with a letter to the Sachem having control of the desired tract, requesting him to give the immigrants possession and promising to pay therefor; there having been some prior negotiations for the land.† Charged with this document Treat and his friends returned to Connecticut to make arrangements for the removal, and early in the Spring of 1666 the first emigrants from Milford embarked for New Jersey. Tradition gives us reason to suppose that about thirty persons, male and female, composed this party, and the vessels bearing them to their newly selected home were those whose arrival in the Passaic has been adverted to.

* Elizabeth Smith, daughter of Richard Smith, of Smithtown, Long Island, widow of William Lawrence of Tew's Neck. East Jersey, under the Proprietors, p. 85.

† Examination of Claim, &c., p. 9.

It appears that the omission on the part of Treat, to deliver promptly the letter to the Indians with which he was furnished by Carteret and to complete the arrangements for the occupancy of the desired tract, was the cause of unexpected embarrassment and delay. On attempting to land their goods at some point on the river, they were warned off by Indians on the ground who claimed to be the owners, and informed them that they had not yet parted with their right thereto.* The goods were therefore re-ladened, and a report of the circumstances made to the Governor.

These unexpected difficulties, the result probably of misunderstanding merely, were removed at this interview. Samuel Edsal, a resident on Bergen-neck, to whom the neighboring chiefs had become known through several negotiations with them that he had conducted, both on his own account and as interpreter for others—was authorized by Carteret to effect the purchase.† Accompanied by Treat, and some others of the new comers, he proceeded up the Hackensack to confer with those who claimed to be the proprietors of the land west of the Passaic;—but let us hear what Treat himself states:—“One Perro “laid claim to the said Passaic Lands, which is “now called Newark, and the result of our “treaty was, that we obtained of a body of said

A bill of sale was made out, arrangements perfected for taking possession, and soon the little party, relieved from their close quarters on board the vessels, were established on the site of the contemplated town.

While these preliminary measures were being consummated, an opportunity was afforded for the preparation and execution of written stipulations with certain agents from Guilford and Branford,—who had either been fellow passengers with the Milford people or had arrived subsequently,—that settlers from those places should be permitted to join in forming one common township, provided definite intimations to that effect should be received prior to the ensuing first of November. The meeting at which this agreement was made, was held, probably, on board of one of the vessels lying "near to Elizabethtown," on the 21st May, and was verified by the signatures of Robert Treat for the Milford people, and Samuel Swain for those of Guilford and Branford on the 24th of the same month; it being, they say, their "desire to be of one heart and consent, through God's blessing, with one hand they may endeavor the carrying on of spiritual concernments, as also civil and town affairs, ACCORDING TO GOD AND A GODLY GOVERNMENT."*

We are carried back by this agreement to that other, which forty-four years before was perfected in the cabin of the Mayflower off the coast of Massachusetts, by the pilgrim fathers, who "for the glory of God, and advancement of the Christian faith" in the presence of God and one another solemnly and mutually covenanted and combined into a civil body politic for the better ordering and preservation and furtherance of the ends they had in view. Although we are not permitted to chronicle the name of the vessel, on board of which the Newark settlers thus intimated the principles that were to guide them in their undertaking, yet the instrument itself will ever perpetuate the fact of their adherence to the same fundamental truths, on which the Plymouth Colonists had based their hopes of prosperity and happiness.

On attempting to picture to ourselves the forms, animate and inanimate, and the various conditions of active existence which made the world as it was in ages gone, our conceptions must come so far short of the realities we would reproduce that, we can only regard them as simply symbolical, as mere shadowy portraiture in which outline and body are dimly distinguishable and which scarcely serve to present the main characteristics of what we would evolve from the obscurity of the past. Such must be our experience on summoning before the imagination, the woods and waters, hills and dales, fields and meadows which made the landscapes here two hundred years ago;—while striving, amid the tumultuous noises and busy scenes around us, to realize the quietude and repose of primeval nature as it then reigned, disturbed only by the casual notes of a flitting bird, the hum of insects, or perchance the stealthy step of the savage, or the rippling of the Passaic as the placid stream was disturbed by his bark canoe.

The contour of the western hills, the river in its general aspects, and the stars which are nightly reflected in its surface, constitute all, probably, upon which our eyes rest, that wore the same appearance to the strangers who then were drawn hither by the natural advantages of the country. As they sailed up the bay, the broad meadows which then, as now, skirted the southern margin of the stream must have been among the chief attractions, from their similarity, to the eye, to the rich alluvial bottom lands of the Connecticut, promising abundant supplies of forage without tillage; while the higher land in the distance, not so wooded as to interfere materially with its immediate cultivation, but sufficiently so for shade and ornament, presented such rural charms as marked it out for the site of the settlement. On the north a pine forest covered the peninsula between the Hackensack and the Passaic, while farther west the hills which formed the horizon, gave assurance of other contributions to meet the present and perspective requirements of the settlers.

It must be within the memory of many in this audience, as well as my own, when along the river front there was an almost continuous bluff, such as may still be seen in the northern limits of the city, in some places rising perhaps from thirty to fifty feet above the marsh of flags which in most places skirted the water, and doubtless the generally elevated position of the site was one inducement for the location here.

The area selected for the town plot, had its inequalities of surface, and through some parts of it meandered brooks, that, having their heads in the hills towards the west, intersected the plain in different directions. Trees were not in superabundance, and it was found necessary, before many years, to adopt measures for the preservation of such as were conveniently situated in the streets for shade or ornament.*

* Town Records, Feb'y 6, 1676, p. 66. An erroneous impression very generally prevails that we are indebted to the original settlers, or their immediate successors for the larger of the noble Elms that ornament our streets and parks; and the consequent inference that the Elm is of slow growth, in connection with the unfounded supposition that it is peculiarly susceptible to attacks from noxious insects, has led to considerable neglect in its cultivation, although it must be conceded to be one of our most beautiful shade trees.

It is somewhat remarkable that nothing is said in the Town Records of the first setting out of the trees on either of "the Commons;" although the Town Committee in office when it was done, deserve, for their good taste, judgment and consideration for posterity, to have their names inscribed high upon the roll of the city's benefactors. In the absence therefore of direct testimony, we must seek collateral information as to the period when these now aged and too neglected friends of ours, first cast their shade across the pathways of our progenitors, and the conclusion arrived at must be that, with the exception of very few, a half dozen perhaps, at most, within the city limits, our larger elms are only from sixty to seventy years old; while the far greater number fall considerably short of that age.

It must be remembered that only one species of the Elm, of the three or four indigenous to America, is found in this section of the country. It is easily distinguishable by its long pendulous branches, presenting a marked contrast—as the varieties in our parks clearly demonstrate—to the more rigid upright forms of its English and European cousins that at different times and in different ways have been introduced, and there is no evidence that it was at all common at the period of settlement or for many years thereafter. As late as 1794 the intelligent traveller, Wansey—who passed through Newark, Elizabethtown, Rahway, &c., on his way to Philadelphia, says expressly, "I saw no elm trees anywhere; I believe it is not a native of America, at least not that which is so common in England." (An Excursion to the United States in 1794, by Henry Wansey, F. A. S., 2d Ed'n, p. 87). And a venerable gentleman, yet living, in his ninety-first year, writes to me, "I have little remembrance of Newark before 1797. I made, as I remember, only two visits from New York up to that time, and those very short. I do not recollect seeing any trees on the Commons as the Parks were then called. The old church, where the present Trinity Church stands, had no trees around it that I remember."

The Town was laid out, at first, with little reference to regularity or symmetry, and the courses given to the streets were probably made to conform to the character of the surface, the more or less freedom from obstructions in certain directions modifying their courses, and perhaps an Indian path may have been followed in locating what is now Broad street; that, and our present Market, Mulberry and Washington streets, constituting all the principal highways of the early settlers. The location of the parks was probably

There are many elms in various parts of the city whose ages are well known, and whose growth, although materially interfered with by the pavements preventing the access of water to their roots, corresponds with that given as the usual growth of the species, for the number of years they have stood, and confirms the view above taken as to the ages of our larger trees.

If our examination is extended to other cities, similar results are obtained. For examples: Previous to 1733 there were but few trees in Boston Common. In that year there were two rows of sixteen trees set out (Drake's Boston, pp, 592, 829) I do not know that the position of these can be identified. but it is doubtful if any of them are among the venerables whom the Boston authorities, to their honor, so assiduously now watch over and protect.

Lucien W. Sperry, Esq., Mayor of New Haven, informs me that prior to 1785 the streets of that proverbially shaded city had in them only two trees, and that the old elms, which now so adorn the place, were planted between 1785 and 1790, the largest now being about four feet diameter. This is about the size of our larger elms now standing in the Military Park, only three or four having a greater diameter. The largest I have seen in the city, anywhere, measures a little more than five feet, being nearly sixteen feet in circumference.

It is hoped that this brief reference to the subject may lead to a more extended cultivation of the Elms—and that more care may be taken of those we now have. With scarcely an opportunity to profit by the rains which the clouds distil for their benefit, their trunks throttled by the flaggings of the sidewalks to such a degree that we see them everywhere struggling to get free, with parasitical plants abstracting their juices—with wounds and injured limbs uncared for—we cannot wonder if in a few years "Ichabod" should be written upon our public grounds.

determined by peculiarities of surface which rendered the ground less favorable for "home lots"; what is now the Military Park being low and springy.

It seems that only a small number remained at the place during the first summer,* but it is probable that the autumn found the settlers in full force, busily engaged in preparing for the approaching winter, with all its untried experiences. Would that we could lift Time's curtain that obscures from view their doings in those first months of our city's history!

In accordance with the terms of the agreement of May 21st and 24th, twenty-three heads of families, resident at Branford, on the 30th of October, 1666, intimated their acquiescence in the proposed junction with the Milford people by signing the following document†:

The texts of Scripture referred to in the margin of this document, indicating the Supreme authority to which they bowed and wished ever to be subordinate, read thus :

“And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them.—JER. xxx : 21.

“Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee whom the Lord thy God shall choose ; one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee ; thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother.”—DEUT. xvii : 15.

“Take ye wise men, and understanding, and known among your tribes, and I will make them rulers over you.”—DEUT. i : 13.

“Moreover, thou shalt provide out of all the

*This reference to these texts was simply conforming to views expressed and acted upon during the whole history of the New Haven Colony. On the 4th of June, 1639, when about to lay the foundations of their civil and religious polity—“Mr. Davenport declared unto them by the Scriptures what kind of persons might best be trusted with matters of government, and by sundry arguments from Scripture proved that such as were described,—Ex. xviii : 21; Deut. i : 13, with Deut. xvii : 15, I Cor. vi : 1, 6 and 7, ought to be entrusted by them.” (Fundamental Articles, Lambert, p. 48, Trumbull's Connecticut I, 504.) It is somewhat remarkable that the places where these texts are to be found should be so frequently misprinted ; both the above authorities give them erroneously, and even the Editors of our own printed Town Records, failed to correct a freak of the types in connection with them.

people, able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties and rulers of tens."—EXODUS i: 13.

It would be well for the city, well for the state, well for the country, if our practice now conformed, more than it does, to the tenor of these texts.

It would be an agreeable task to portray the characters of some of these first comers, but time will not permit, and other hands can do them greater justice—I would merely remark that, Jasper Crane, whose name heads the list of the Branford men, occupied among them, a position scarcely less prominent than was that of Treat among the people of Milford. As a magistrate and as an officer of the church he enjoyed the full confidence and respect of his neighbors, and hence the honor accorded to him on this occasion, to precede even Abraham Pierson their revered spiritual head.

Of Mr. Pierson's personal characteristics, both physical and mental, we have comparatively few particulars; but it cannot be doubted that he possessed a strong will, great independence, unswerving perseverance, and more than ordinary power in controlling and guiding those attracted by his virtues, or to whom he was officially related. This is manifest from the manner in which he identified himself with his people, and his people clung to him, following his movements whithersoever they tended, so that his congregation might have been numbered among the Peripatetics. His first flock in America was at Lynn in Massachusetts, whence he and they removed to South Hampton, Long Island, which was settled under his spiritual administrations; thence he and they removed to Branford, and now we see him at the head of the same or nearly the same band transferred to Newark. He was a Puritan whose character, so far as it is known to me, is free from stain, on whom no charge can rest, of variation in doctrine or contrariety of life from the acknowledged fathers of "the church in Christ after the Congregational Way;" a rigid religionist, an honest man, a good citizen of simple tastes and consistent life; but his subsequent career, from his identification with the history of the First Presbyterian Church in this city—so well narrated in Dr. Stearns' admirable volume—is too well known to call for further comment from me, save an expression of sincere regret that the grave of such a pastor and such a man, should be without some fitting testimonial of the respect due to his memory, from those who are now enjoying the results of his labors and self-denial.

The document thus signed by the people of Branford was dispatched to MILFORD—for by that name, endeared to them by many interesting associations, was the town designated by those first upon the ground—and in the ensuing month, the inhabitants “declared their consent and readiness” to conform to its requirements. Although not as numerous as the settlers from Milford and New Haven, yet the more perfect organization of the Branford people, as a church, appears to have given them sufficient ascendancy in the new settlement, although the latest comers, for it to receive from them, or their pastor individually, the name of NEWARK; Mr. Pierson's early associations with Newark in England, when preparing for the ministry, prompting its conferment.

The people from Milford and New Haven, had located themselves temporarily before the arrival of their friends from Branford, for the most part on what are now known as Broad, Mulberry, Washington and Market streets, their lots with a few exceptions lying south of Market street; and the Branford people established themselves on their arrival north of that street, on Broad and Washington streets. By a subsequent resolution of the town all were allowed to select their home lots in the respective districts thus temporarily occupied, but the "neighbors from Milford and New Haven"—thus testifying to his personal worth and their deep sense of obligation to him —“freely gave way that Captain Robert Treat should choose his lots ” and be allowed eight acres for his home lot, two acres more than were allowed to others, and he selected what is now the south-east corner of Broad and Market streets, taking in the whole distance between Broad and Mulberry streets, and extending south to beyond the site of the First Presbyterian Church.*

The earnest desire felt to render themselves secure in their possessions, led to an immediate settlement of their bounds. The arrangement entered into with the Indians through the agency of Samuel Edsal, which preceded the settlement, was perfected by the execution of a more formal instrument at a conference with them held “at the head of the Cove of Bound Brook on the 11th July, 1667, † by which they obtained the Indian title to all the lands between the Bay on the east, the foot of Watchung Mountain on the west, a branch of Passaic named “Yauntakah” on the north, ‡ and Elizabethtown bounds on the south. Eleven years later, on the 13th of March, 1678, the western limits of the tract were extended to the top of the mountain by a deed from two other Indians, the consideration for the extension being “two guns, three coats and thirteen cans of rum.”* The boundary line of the town on the south, separating it from Elizabethtown, as agreed upon on the 20th of May, 1668, ran from “the top of a little round hill named dividant “hill; and from thence to run upon a North- “west Line into the country” until it reached the Watchung mountain.†

I cannot refrain from quoting here the narrative of one of the spectators of the scene when the little congress of worthies from the two towns met to establish this boundary. It is contained in one of the documents connected with the legal difficulties between the Elizabethtown people and the Proprietors in after years;—an affidavit of an old man, taken in 1743—he states “that “he heard Governor Treat tell after what manner

 “the line was settled between the two towns;
 “and that it was done in so loving and solemn
 “a manner, that he thought it ought never to be “removed; for he (the Governor) himself being “among them at that Time prayed with them on

 “John Ogden (being one of the first purchasers)
 “prayed among the people, and returned thanks
 “for their loving agreement, and the Governor
 “also said that, if the Newark people differed
 “with the Elizabethtown people concerning that “line, that he believed that they would never “prosper.”*

It is gratifying to know that not until the township of Clinton was formed in 1834, did this “hill sanctified by prayer” cease to be one of the land marks dividing Elizabethtown from Newark.†

* Answer to Bill, p, 47; East Jersey under the Proprietors, p. 46; Town Records p. 10.

† The following lines by Mrs. E. C. KINNEY, were quoted from when the Memoir was read. They are now inserted at length, as most appropriately preserving the poetical features of the event alluded to in the text. They were written at my suggestion in 1846, shortly after the publication of “East Jersey under the Proprietary Governments,” in which the circumstances were narrated:

“DIVIDEND HILL.”

“Pause here O, Muse! that Fancy’s eye
 May trace the footprints still
 Of men that, centuries gone by,
 With prayer ordained this hill;
 As lifts the misty veil of years,
 Such visions here arise
 As when the glorious Past appears
 Before enchanted eyes.

Thus have I performed the duty assigned to me on this occasion and endeavored, briefly and very imperfectly, to show Why, When, and How, the settlement of Newark was effected; and I leave the further elucidation of the various topics of which the event is so suggestive, with the gentlemen who are to succeed me.

In conclusion, allow me to add that we are too apt to regard the present aspect of things around us as due entirely to the energy and enterprise and industry of the present, or immediately preceding generation. So far as relates to the material prosperity resulting from the marvellous progress of the mechanic arts through the instrumentality of improved machinery, and the discoveries of science, much undoubtedly is to be attributed to the activity which has prevailed in the fields of both intellectual and physical investigation during the present century; but we should look beyond the range of our own time for many of the elements which have ensured success. The

"I see, from midst the faithful few
Whose deeds yet live sublime—
Whose guiltless spirits, brave as true,
Are models ' for all time',
A group upon this height convened—
In solemn prayer they stand—
Men, on whose sturdy wisdom leaned
The settlers of our land.

"In mutual love the line they trace
That will their homes divide,
And ever mark the chosen place
That prayer hath sanctified;
And here it stands—a temple old,
Which crumbling-Time still braves;
Though ages have their cycles rolled
Above those patriot's graves.

"As Christ transfigured on the height
The three beheld with awe,
And near his radiant form, in white,
The ancient prophets saw;
So, on this summit I behold
With beatific sight,
Once more our praying sires of old,
As spirits clothed in light.

"A halo crowns the sacred hill,
And thence glad voices raise
A song that doth the concave fill—
Their prayers are turned to praise!
Art may not for these saints of old
The marble urn invent;
Yet here the Future shall behold
Their Heaven-built monument."

men, whose enterprise and skill set in motion the wheels which with accumulating velocity have rolled hither this abundant prosperity, this firm substratum of religion and morality, were not of this era exclusively, but will be found deriving their characteristics from those, who constituted the human freight of the little barks that anchored in the Passaic two hundred years ago. The tottering attempts at locomotion in the child, his cautious movements, his discouragements in the face of difficulties, may not be traceable in the vigorous movements, the bold and successful achievements of the man, but nevertheless, the latter are the legitimate results of the feeble efforts that preceded them.

If we properly estimate the advantages which this inheritance of ours confers upon us, we will cherish a grateful remembrance of the fathers whose self-denial, persevering industry, active energies and moral worth were the seminal principles from which they were evolved; and it is due to them, ourselves and our posterity, to see that in no respect the inheritance is impaired while we are in occupancy; and especially that its moral characteristics should not suffer through our indifference or neglect.

The Community at first, as we have seen, was an exclusive one. Habitaney was made dependent upon a full assent and subscription to their fundamental agreements; among the most prominent of which we find an obligation to bear a due proportion of the expense of maintaining a Christian Ministry, and conformity to the established faith and worship. The language in which the last requisition was clothed is worthy of notice :

“ Item, it is agreed upon, that in case any shall “ come into us or arise up amongst us that shall “ willingly or wilfully disturb us in our Peace and “ Settlements, and especially that would subvert
 “ us from the true Religion and worship of God,
 “ and cannot or will not keep their opinions to “ themselves or be reclaimed after due Time and “ means of Conviction and reclaiming hath been “ used ; it is unanimously agreed upon and Con“ sented unto as a fundamental Agreement and “ Order, that all [such] Persons so ill disposed
 “ and affected shall after Notice given them, from “ the Town quietly depart the Place seasonably,
 “ the Town allowing them valuable Considera“ tions for their Lands or Houses as Indifferent “ Men shall price them, or else leave them to “ make the best of them to any Man the Town “ shall approve of.”*

We now see how utopian was this scheme, how altogether at variance with the natural tendencies of the race, yet we must admit that there was nothing unjust or unreasonable in these terms thus specifically set forth prior to settlement. Having voluntarily entered the community with a full knowledge of its constitution, why should any member of it construe the liberty accorded to him so broadly, as to warrant the toleration of licentiousness, moral or political? Many are the communities at the present day, undoubtedly suffering from the cause which the fathers of our city, thus early, endeavored to guard against. The liberty and toleration which the spirit of the age now advocates, too frequently lead to the virtual enacting of the scene described in Æsop's fiction of the Farmer and the Frozen Adder, the nurture, protection, and numerous advantages extended to those seeking an asylum from misfortune and oppression, being repaid by injurious influences and a prejudicial exercise of the privileges conferred.

It was emphatically a Christian community that was established here; by no means faultless, but one, that recognized the truth that "it is the river from which men drink and live, not such as they bend over to see themselves reflected in before they die, that flows untainted and perennial,"*—a Community in which religion was no abstraction, but a living, active, vivifying principle:—as a Christian community have the successors of the first settlers prospered, and as a Christian community should we be zealous in sustaining the characteristics of so high a profession. That there are elements at work here, as everywhere, calculated to subvert the aims and measures which that duty calls upon us to advocate and advance, every observer of the times must be aware; but there is no reason for apprehension or discouragement if we can bring ourselves boldly to imitate,—in such a measure and in such a way as are consonant with the times in which we live,—the resolute determination of the fathers, as Christian men to eschew both principles and associations at variance with such a title, and to disregard those political considerations which too often lead, as in days of yore, to the bartering away of essential and permanent good for a miserable “mess of pottage” in the shape of evanescent popularity. “Quit yourselves like men, be strong”—should be the inspiriting cry among those who are in the fight, summoning every well wisher of this goodly heritage of ours to its defence, no matter what may be his sphere of action. As when in the days of old, the sounds of the drum that young Johnson caused to re-echo in the streets of Newark, called each inhabitant to the church or to the council board indifferently,* there should now be but one bugle-call, one common watch-word, and our banners should bear but one motto, all indicative of the one common cause; the upholding with entire unanimity the cardinal truth that, the affairs of

* See Town Records, pp. 11, 34, 35, 38, 39, 75, 78, for the varied uses of the drum.

the church and the affairs of the town—the happiness of the people—the diffusion of education—the prosperity of trade—manufactures—commerce—all, are alike dependent for their “crown of rejoicing” upon those principles “according to God and a Godly government,” which are as applicable and efficacious in our day and generation, in this “our Town upon Passaick River,” as they were in sixteen hundred and sixty-six.

Forgive the memories of the boy!

Whither are flown the glowing skies
Whose very clouds would roses bear?
The fresh, sweet air of morning-rise?
The sports, the tasks, the simple joys?
And where the friends that shared?—ah where?

The old are gone, the new are strange,
Schoolmates are withering to their fall,
Or spread, the busy world to range—
All, suffering from the rust of change:
Himself perchance most changed of all.

Why squander tears o'er nations dead,
Or mouldering towers, or glories lost,
When hearts by nearer wounds are bled?

Our years, our joys, our hopes are fled—
That is the thorn that rankles most.

We sigh o'er stranded hulk of Rome,
O'er mammoth ribs of Gothic sway,
O'er shrines beheaded of their dome;
But the sharp thought that reaches home
Is that our strength has found decay.

O, hard to feel our flagging powers,
Their wonted arms in sorrow wield!—
So pliant once in boastful hours:
O, hard to press with trust the flowers
That no more flattering incense yield!

We burst like roses upon life
In the full flush of odorous bloom,
With all free bounties brimming rife,
To waste our leaves in worldly strife
Down to the thorns, the roses' doom.

Yet why the common lot revile
Nor heed the lesson it would teach?
For man in ruins still may smile—
The graces of the crumbling pile
Are yet within his feeble reach.

For Cheerfulness with wreathing green,
And Patience with her mellowing tone,
May soften tenderly a scene

Of dignified decline, serene,
 More touching than the mouldering stone.

So, comrades, lose not heart with power!
 But wrapped in fortitude sublime,
 Whose symbol is the ivied tower
 Worn, but unrent by storms that lower,
 Stand honored by the rising time!

Our Worthy Founders.

Sing of the days of long-ago!
 The frugal days of simple show:
 When men of old, of iron mould,
 On acres fairly bought and sold,
 The seed of our fair town did sow.
 Alas! the age is rushing fast,
 And recks but little of the past,
 And scarce a casual glance will cast
 On sires so deep below;
 Whose lofty deeds are mountains vast
 From whence our fountains flow.
 The greed of gain, the chase of power
 Absorb the uses of the hour,
 And in the hurry of their kind
 When all look forward—few behind—
 Who has time
 For rolls sublime

That hoard the tale of energy
Of a deep-buried ancestry?

But we have better thoughts my friends!
And quit the strife for worldly ends,
Chastened by hallowed memories:
Bending meek our reverent course
Back to our primal source,
There gratefully to lay
What offering of our praise we may
Upon their tombs who oped the way
For the march of the mighty host
Of the modern time and boast.
Such homage be it ours to pay!—
At least for one bright day.

Their Pleasant Voyage.

All in the merry month of May
From the rude New England shore
Sailed an hundred souls or more
For a new home, leagues away,
Where Passaic, from the west,
Wooded with kissing hand her guest;
Voyage worse for perils grave
Than were now the Atlantic wave—
By the broad Sound-billows tossed,
By the Hell-gate breakers crossed,
'Twixt the isles that gem the tide,

O'er the noble haven wide—
Then so void and now so full—
Through the rushing Kill-van-Kull,
Up the shining, shallow bay,
Fused of rivers run-away,
Drawn by goodly prospects wide,
Dainty lures of sweet spring-tide,
'Till Passaic with spread arms—
Rosy-red with virgin charms,
Garnished like an Indian bride,
Wild as the wild-flowers at her side,
Coy, yet flattered by his gaze,
All-a-tremble, all amaze—
Waves the gallant conqueror on,
Half reluctant to be won.

All in a marvel of delight
At the joys of sound and sight
On he moves enchanted quite :
Welcomed by the nodding rushes,
By the hailing wrens, and thrushes,
By the meadows' flowery plain
Glad no more to bloom in vain,
By the birch and hemlock spray
Tossing incense o'er the way,
By the grove that inly glows
With the light of dogwood blows,
Where magnolia lurks in shade
By her spicy breath betrayed :

While wood-robin—spokesman he
 Of the greenwood company—
 Piping clear his pastoral cheer,
 Soft as grace to lover's ear,
 Bids the wanderer, newly come,
 Welcome to his chosen home.

The time would fail me here to dwell
 Upon the landing on the shore,
 The Indian troubles, quickly o'er
 Where Justice rules—suffice to tell
 The title to the land we hold
 Was fairly bought with honest gold ;
 Not wrung by force, nor stole by sleight,
 As wont the red-man's primal right.

Their Simple Ways.

Gay Charles was king at our foundation,
 When luxury cursed the mother isle ;
 And the dull business of the nation
 Was doomed to wait on pleasure's smile.
 How different—had he turned to see—
 The life of his poor colony !
 Where simple laws gave simple rule,
 And boys were sent to pious school—
 O goodly days by-gone !
 When came preferment through the church,
 When pedagogues had faith in birch

That roundly was laid on :
 When early men would delve and sow,
 And women—bless them!—cook and spin,
 And tidy keep the house within,
 The weary good man's smile to win—
 Two hundred years ago !

I dare not seek if then, as now,
 Some venial errors there might grow—
 Some frailties to our own akin :
 If boys ran truuant then from school,
 Or if the helpmeet loved to rule :
 Or if the gossips, thawed by tea,
 Would e'er run over wastefully
 With tales of neighbor's husbandry :
 If patriots—that undying race—
 Would stump the town for pelf, or place ;
 If preachers from their flock would flee
 At chink of weightier salary,
 Or give an old discourse once more
 Before the audience cried encore :
 Or if on drowsy afternoon
 Soothed by the nasal hymnal tune
 Hearers would doze—O heinous crime!—
 In tones more startling than sublime
 Breaking the hush of sermon-time
 Two hundred years ago !

If lads would glance with hardy guile
 To win of maids the answering smile ;
 And brave for that too-tempting crown
 The awful blight of Elders' frown :
 Be 't as it may, one fact is clear ;
 They somehow found, at that far day,
 Through all impediments, a way
 To hint the wish to lovers dear :
 For they are gone, and we are here.

Their Goodly Deeds.

Whate'er the lapses of the dead,
 Their goodly works are broadly spread :
 Thanks to the builders wise whose aid
 Our deep, and wide foundations laid !
 Narrow in means yet open in heart
 Their liberal soil was set apart
 For ample commons, spacious ways,
 The boast, the comfort of our days,
 All sentinelled with elms of proof,
 Wisely devised for our behoof
 To ward the darts of summer rays :
 As if with far prophetic gaze
 They pierced the future's solemn haze,
 And saw the harvest of their prime
 Even at planting time.
 Bless them for seed they came to sow !
 For virtues which they taught to grow !

For modest thrift that hateth show!--
 And for their wholesome laws, that made
 Our after-glory bud and blow!
 Bless them for sunshine and for shade!
 And all the liberal plans they laid
 Two hundred years ago!

Their Place of Rest.

Peace to their ashes! there they lie—
 How solemn their tranquillity!
 Their labor done, their wages paid,
 Asleep with dreams that never fade:
 Their souls we trust are with the just,
 The rest, to very bones, is dust.
 Peace to their ashes! we cry peace—
 O mockery!—when there is no peace,
 For highways mar their place of rest:
 Their sacred dust, this day so praised,
 By traffic's wheels ignobly raised
 Flies in our perjured face:
 While schoolboys trample on their breast,
 And maids their washing ply with jeers
 And songs Milesian—harsh to ears
 Grown dainty with the hymning spheres.
 O let them slumber quietly!
 That little plot their homestead be!
 With-held from commerce's greedy clutch—

A little earth, for charity,
To them that gave to us so much!

Their Noble Example.

If men a rightful pride may feel
 In noble ancestry—
Noble by merit, dubbed by steel
 Laid on by Hand most High—
'Tis we, whose fathers bore the brunt
Of toil at our foundation-front.
The weapon bold that cleared the way
 With such a breadth of sway
Was not the warrior's cruel blade—
 O, no! not so, or rarely so—
The axe, the plough, the scythe, the spade—
Such were the arms at early day
With which the ranks of enterprise
Achieved their fruitful victories
 Two hundred years ago!

Yet not unused to needful arms
 Our manly sires of yore;
When mothers shook with night alarms,
As wolf would howl, or savage prowl
 Around the cabin door;
For law was weak at origin,
 And leaned upon the brave:
Who would be safe themselves must save—

Their own right arm protection gave
 To trembling flocks within.
The prowess of an after day—
A down the long historic way
 Proved 'gainst many a midway foe—
Was nurtured in the hazards bold
That dignified the life of old
 Two hundred years ago.

Best tested in the trial vast,
When an hundred years had passed,
In the sad but holy strife
 When for very life
We rose at our unnatural mother,
 That in a foul and morbid hour
 Her very issue would devour ;
And every noble impulse smother
 That erst in trials ample
 By precept and example
Herself so oft had taught to grow.
So did the dreadful strife begin,
So did we win, so have to win,
Not by arms, and not by skill,
But by indomitable will :
Driven oft, but conquered never,
Broke in part, but heart-whole ever ;
'Till the unwelcome truth grew plain,
 No hardest blow of hate

Could rend the treble-mailed gate
Whose rivets were the wrongs of state.

Our Gallant State.

Then in the dark sublimely shone
Our little star—the brightest one :
In normal life, of quiet mind,
Modest in mien, modest in size,
Between her mightier peers she lies
A State to humble lot resigned ;
But wronged, a giant she'd defy
 Foot to foot, and eye to eye,
 Without a glance behind :
Or let a rising storm reveal
Disaster to the general weal,
 None of the common blood—
No scion of the sisterhood—
Would hazard for the common good
 Her all more gallantly.
So in that bitter, hopeless hour
She girt her loins to grapple power ;
From Hudson's shore to Delaware
Her ravaged soil was trodden bare—
The highway, and the battle-ground—
Red with the waste of many a wound.
O ye, her sons, keep fresh her story !
 Swell with her precious memories !

Carve in brass her victories!
Shout for her fields of glory!
 “Trenton!”—all hail forever!
First dawning of the joyful day
That swept the clouds of night away;
 “Princeton!”—all hail forever!
Where dying Mercer pierced the line
And broke the charm of discipline;
 “Monmouth!”—all hail forever!
That made despairing foes recoil
Disgusted with the ungracious soil.

Such are the jewels rare
The State upon the front shall wear
Throughout all time—nor only these;
For when the mistress of the seas
Bore down with challenge in her stride,
Our tars the insolent foe defied;
And clove with many a sturdy stroke
 The boasted hearts of oak.

Her Steady Fidelity.

And lastly, in our saddest hour,
When family-feud and lust of power
From smouldering threats fumed up to deeds
Foul as the smoke of blazing weeds,
Dimming all virtues in their spheres,
And bringing patriot eyes to tears,

The ship of state adrift, and cast
 Rudderless on the driving blast,
 No chief to guide, no hands to man her,
 No light o'erhead
 Save what was shed
 By the live stars upon her banner,
 'Twas then our people faithful stood
 As ever by the general good
 Through all the land's distress;
 The charter and the grace of God,
 The certain path our fathers trod,
 Sufficing every rising want
 At last ensured success.
 The Charter—that right-royal grant
 Vouchsafed by our great sov'reign-sire—
 Has borne us through a storm of fire
 Whose terrible fury's height
 Had fused to dross all politics
 Of mortal growth, however wise,
 Unfounded on eternal right.

Our Boundless Future.

So shall the issue ever be !
 Whatever dread contingency
 May overhang the land,
 This fabric still shall stand !
 Aware no man may hope for grace
 As prophet in his native place,

Still boldly here I dare
 Our onward glory to declare :
 Here on the solemn ground I tread
 Between the living and the dead—
 The breathing crowd before me joined
 With the dumb witnesses behind—
 I with a seer's faith foretell—
 Not discord, nor the gates of Hell
 That may assault the citadel

 Against it shall prevail!

But down the ages' lengthening trail
 This fabric still shall stand!
 To him—the bard—I make appeal!
 Who, when two hundred years are due
 Shall laud this day with kindred zeal
 To prove my presage true!

 O rest ye then secure!

All thronging reasons witness sure
 'Tis God's command this work shall stand,

 To ripen and endure!

Because cemented with free blood
 Her solid ramparts have withstood
 The rage of every sweeping flood :
 Because her frame was wisely planned
 By architects of cunning hand,
 With all Time's failures at command :
 Because it works itself from ill
 In every strait, unconquered still,

With rare self-regulating skill :
Because its vast machinery,
Wheel within wheel, was hinted by
The starry plan of God on high :
Because below the earthquake's shock
Mining for ground of solid stock
Our founders reached foundation-rock :
The rights of Man !—God's chartered grace !—
 There is no deeper base :
The rights of Man !—sole adamant
Where States their steadfast throne may plant !
 The true foundation-rock !

AN ORATION

DELIVERED ON THE

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY

OF THE

SETTLEMENT OF NEWARK,

BY

HON. WILLIAM B. KINNEY.

ORATION.

Near four centuries ago it was loftily announced that Columbus had given a new world to Castile and Leon; and the mighty Hierarchy that then ruled in all human affairs confirmed the gift. What has become of that insolent sovereignty now? France soon after seized and appropriated the northern half of the great gratuity, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the waters of the St. Lawrence; not one foot of which now owns her sway. And where now are the vast dominions of the Portuguese, the Swedes, the Dutch, founded with such high hopes and imposing resources? All, all vanished, like the pageant of a dream! After something more than a century of vain endeavor, this stupendous theatre of so many mighty enterprises, becomes the inheritance of a few feeble bands of friendless fugitives, fleeing from a little island in the sea, with nothing but their own hardy virtues! Events so marvellous may well summon us to reflection; and it is to recall and commemorate one of the worthiest of these little bands that we are here to-day. A solemnity that well becomes the house of God, who wrought the marvel! Well and worthily have the authorities of our goodly city, which they founded, in co-operation with that Society which has done so much to rescue their precious memorials, ordained a public festival to their honor; that thus, we, too, their descendants, might all have the privilege of manifesting our sense of obligation, and so proving our own worthiness by a due appreciation of theirs.

Such observances rouse and gratify the noblest emotions. They are especially wholesome in the midst of prosperous fortunes; the rich fruits of achievements not our own. In the luxuriance of youth, and in the vigor of manhood, it is wise sometimes to pause in our pursuits, and recall the precious memories of the past; legacies which might be forgotten, but for such periodical calls to reflection. They have the approbation of wisdom, and the sanction of religion. The voice of history has not in all its compass a note but answers in unison. Even the barbarian Briton who defended his country against the Roman invasion, driven to the remotest extremity of the land, rallied his followers to battle by the heart-stirring appeal, "Think of your fathers and your posterity!" So the old Romans, in their better days, celebrated in anniversary festivals the great events that signaled their annals. One of the chief causes of the early prosperity of Rome, is found in this cherished recollection of the virtues of its founders. No virtuous people will ever forget those by whom their infancy was cradled and defended.

The actors of the day we now solemnize were eminently worthy of these posthumous honors, though worldly fame has been parsimonious of her favors. Their numbers were small—their station in life obscure—the object of their enterprise unostentatious—the theatre of their exploits narrow and remote, how could they possibly be the favorites of worldly fame? That pander of power and pride, whose delight it has been to celebrate the men of blood who wade through slaughter to thrones, the sceptred oppressors of the earth, who riot in feats of arms, and tournaments, and crusades: and there has been praise, and glory, and revelry for all these things, to betray men into the worship of their destroyers. Happier the men whose lives were prosaic! Happier the people whose annals are dull! And we their offspring may well rejoice in a lineage which aspired after the true and the good, the absolute, the eternal—after principles which never yield, and truths which never perish; deeply feeling that nothing which perishes can have a lasting interest with the immortal man. Noble sires! Men of peace and men of God! you have earned an immortality of virtuous fame, worthy as that which inspired the dying encomium of Pericles—"No man through your means ever put on mourning."

They did not come hither hoping to pass the residue of life as a long summer day of ease, nor in the pursuit of worldly treasure. True pioneers of christian civilization, they came to found in the fear of God, for themselves and those who were to come after them, a new social system; a social system, in which ignorance and idleness and poverty should be unknown—in which labor, free, intelligent, manly labor—earning its own wages, accumulating those wages into capital, educating childhood, maintaining worship, and jealously forestalling all monopoly of luxury, that might make indolence the distinction of a gentleman—should be forever a vital virtue. They were themselves all laborers, almost all farmers, with whom self-denial was at once a necessity and a discipline. They labored in the field together; built their own houses, planted their own corn, earned their own bread by the sweat of their own brows; and their exalted purposes ennobled all this drudgery of life. For where freedom and justice prevail, hard labor will be honorable to the world's end.

Of such stuff were the men from whom we come. They were no chartered libertines pursuing lost fortune; they were not broken-down gentlemen of aristocratic pretensions, cast-off members of powerful families, like some of their contemporaries—Capt. John Smith's "vagabond gentlemen and goldsmiths." No wild enthusiasts, with heads bewildered by the heart. Nor were they mere speculative philosophers. But they were plain men of stern and lofty virtue, belonging to the middle classes, with whom religion was a life, and not a dogma. Men of invincible energy, deeply imbued with the love of liberty, they had the courage to denounce the civil and religious despotisms of their times, and tearing themselves away from all the endearments of old homes, in a country full of social refinements, sought a place in these then savage wilds, where they might establish freedom of thought, and enjoy the blessings of "a free church in a free State"—a desideratum still to-day in the Old World which they had forever abandoned. A strict democracy existed from the beginning. They appointed their own rulers. Then established a common altar, and a common school. Town meeting, the nursery of American institutions, was their only Parliament. Behold a self-constituted community, in which all men were equal before the law! Where was such a spectacle ever seen before?

The pathos of life is doubtless sometimes repressed by the sterner features of the puritan system, in which they were trained; but unconsciousness of self, singleness of purpose, heroic self-reliance, the sense of God and humanity, are ever manifest to our consciousness as we listen to their story ; and the test of our own progress will be the appreciation of these virtues.

It is the peculiar glory of these pioneers, that, discarding the unchristian spirit of persecution which so deforms the history of some of their otherwise worthy New England colleagues—the soul-torturing spirit of the age to which they belonged—they established a mild toleration, and brought all their doings into harmony with those fundamental principles of freedom, religion, industry, and enterprise, to which we owe all the good we inherit. To the faithful observance of these principles, we owe this prosperous city, with its stately churches of every name, counted by the score—a beautiful brotherhood, fraternally co-operating side by side in diffusing the spirit of life—its well organized system of public schools, its vast teeming factories, all thrilling with the life of modern civilization.

What if they were neither great warriors, nor renowned statesmen ! What if they bequeathed to us none of the wonders of Art ! What if these our Alban fathers left no Corinthian temples, no gothic cathedrals, no proud pyramids, or storied obelisks, on our hills and plains ! They did better. They had far other and higher work to do. Strong in God, and their own heroic patience, they established a civil order in which we trace the germs of all possible good ; an order proceeding from spontaneous moral and industrial co-operation, the result of a sense of mutual dependence, from which is developed respect for mutual rights and interests :—a constitution of things open to all progress ; plastic to the influence of every great improvement ; a living system of life, which is now, at this distance of two centuries, moving on in a career of expansion without a parallel in the history of any other land. Thus do they live in their works. Not, indeed, in breathing bronze or marble, but in the enduring institutions which they founded, in the vital principles which they taught ; principles by which they sought to live, and for which they lived ready to die.

Thus were laid the solid foundations of our prosperity ; and on these, if on any thing human, may be written the words of immortality.

“Eregi monumentum ære perennius.”

Well, then, may we rejoice in our origin with an honest joy. The origin of other races is stained by crime, and belied by fable. Piously should we cherish a patrimony so fair, the priceless legacy of sires so worthy. It was wrought by their hands, it was watered by their tears, it was defended by their valor, it was consecrated by their virtues. And who can now survey the goodly heritage, without a devout sense of its present blessings ? Well may we who own the genius of the place, celebrate a day filled with such memories and hopes. What occasion could be more worthy of our homage? What recollections better adapted to awaken our gratitude, and elevate our thoughts? Surely, all who here breathe their native air to-day, must exultingly rejoice in this privilege of thanksgiving and praise.

It is no part of my office to recount their history. That, happily, has just been done for our instruction and delight by a filial son, whose pious labors through many a year, have written his name imperishably on all the early records of our town and State. In the name of all who prize these memorials, I thank him.

It has been intimated that our progenitors formed one of several kindred companies, by whom this continent was first redeemed and successfully colonized; and that all the other more powerful attempts to effect a permanent colonization, for mere purposes of dominion or gain, had signally failed. A fact so significant deserves further consideration, if we would fully understand the great providential movement of the seventeenth century, to which we owe our existence as a nation. The first of these bands landed at Plymouth, forty-six years before the settlement of Newark, or an hundred and twenty-eight years after the discovery; during which long period all the efforts of royal princes, all the combined energies of powerful corporations and the boldest adventurers, stimulated by glowing imaginations of golden treasures, were made in vain. Queen Elizabeth, under assumed claims, had given the name of Virginia to the entire Northern continent; but the whole result of her four laborious attempts to establish colonies and trade, was a few hundred pounds of tobacco from the adventurous courtier, Raleigh, who taught her the queenly accomplishment of smoking it! Regal searches after a golden fleece ending in tobacco smoke! Not a single subject did she leave in these wide domains, so pompously ordained to commemorate her vaunting virginity.

Her conceited successor, called by his courtiers the Scotch Solomon—as Milton tartly supposed, because the reputed son of David—employed with fanatical zeal the augmented resources of the empire in the same effort, with like discomfiture. All similar attempts by other powers as notably failed. Over the wide regions colonized by Spain and Portugal, glowing with all the splendors of tropical wealth, the gloomy spirit of the Middle Ages still broods in much of its original barbarism. The conquests of Spain were the most brilliant, and proved the most worthless. A ready-made Hierarchy, that double-headed incarnation of Pope and King,—two species of mortal gods, whose infallibility implicates the Divine character,—introduced a feudal aristocracy, bent on conquest, on sudden wealth, and enjoyment without labor. Speedy and unlawful gains produced their natural fruit. Extravagance, extortion and pride prevailed. All incitement to active energy was soon stifled. Agriculture, Commerce, and the Arts languished. Princes and people became alike impoverished, at home and abroad. Their treasures proved their curse. A vain and indolent race ate scanty meals off golden plates, and the fable of king Midas was realized by a nation!

Now, when we behold a feeble company of exiles, with no visible means of power, accomplishing an end which royalty and patronage, the love of dominion and of gold, had so long essayed in vain, and founding a colony which expands into a great empire—stretching in pride and beauty over half the continent, known and felt throughout the earth—we scarcely need ask to see the long pathway of the sea laid bare, its liquid walls on the right and on the left, the shattered chariots of the pursuer floating in fragments upon the floods, to recognize the gracious Power which presided over the exodus of the Pilgrim Fathers.

The sublime movement has no parallel in history, since the humble fishermen of Galilee first dethroned the gods of heathenism. In the simple compact of government formed in their little bark before landing, was assumed for the first time the grand principle of a voluntary Confederacy of free and independent men: instituting government for the benefit, not of the governors, but the governed. Philosophers had long tasked their wits in vain to settle the origin of human government. The hitherto insolvable old problem was here resolved in a single phrase—"We combine ourselves together into a civil body-politic." In this primitive covenant we find the germ of our great Republic, all of whose forms are folded up in its leaves. "We, the people, do ordain," is inscribed upon its chief corner stone. So our great model was but the first of a series, by which a vast hoary system of oppression was to be broken. And yet shallow wits, and sneering skeptics, make themselves merry over the human frailties of these august founders of a new dispensation! Thus it ever is—

"Truth's sacred fort the exploded laugh would win,
And corcombs vanquish Berkeley with a grin."

In comparison with the principles thus inaugurated in these birth-places of our nation, the more dazzling and gorgeous illustrations of the life of the old empires, are as evanescent as the mirage, which paints its dissolving views on the horizon, or a meteoric flash beside the eternal stars. They have settled the basis of all human government for all coming time, viz: that civil and political institutions, all the forms of authority and law, derive their whole life and sanction from one single source—man's inherent consciousness of right to equal membership in that common brotherhood of man, which springs out of the common Fatherhood of God. This is the life-giving principle of our Federal Constitution—that sacred form, in whose life lives all our hope of the future. This principle is both the life of its being, and the law of its forms. It is the waking up of the instinctive sense of this great seminal truth, that is everywhere shaking the hoary despotisms of the earth; aye, causing the very ground to rock beneath them. As the great laws which govern the Universe, are of infinitely more consequence than the Universe itself, so it would be unspeakably less disastrous that whole States should perish through its vindication, than that this divine law of all political stability, the only principle capable of combining, enlightening, and elevating the race of man, should be compromised or subverted.

*“’Tis man’s perdition to be safe,
When for the Truth he ought to die.”*

It has been truly said by a recent commentator, that our political system, thus originated more than two centuries ago, has no exemplar in history; that it is a new growth; that it is not to be understood by the study of other States; that it must be studied from within and in itself. The Colonists really cut themselves off from all vital connection with the Old World. They sought a new one. Their happiness consisted in their escape from the past; from all old political and ecclesiastical abuses. They established a revolutionary order of ideas. Fundamental among these is the doctrine that politics is but a subordinate branch of morals. Hence that man is never more, never less than man. That Mind is of right free. That the equality of human rights rises out of an equality of moral condition. That these rights are not derived from any transmitted powers, not from any inherited privileges, not from any prescriptive authority, but from the consentaneous action of the people.

Much of the work has been unconsciously performed. It was not made by man; it is no discovery or invention, but a natural growth—the slow, unimagined result of the instincts, desires, and efforts of individuals united in a society under novel conditions, and controlled by laws which mastered the thoughts of men. Legitimacy in all its forms was wholly ignored: the throne, the established Church, the orders of nobility, were replaced by a representative democracy, with its elective officers, its free religion, and its political equality. For king, and priest, and noble, it substitutes the People. Thus we find at last a government of the people, framed by the people, for the benefit of the people. It is now seen for the first time that there may be States without princes, though never without a people.—After all her houseless wanderings, lurking like a criminal in secret places, Freedom had now found a home,—a country of her own.

Thanks to the heroic men whose services we celebrate, these primal truths have now become the common-places of modern politics. They have been wrought into our present beneficent system of government, through the labors of successive generations. They run like a golden thread through the whole texture of its legislation. In other regions and other times, poets and philosophers have dreamed of the longed-for consummation, but man had never before been able to accomplish it. These fundamental truths had been overlaid and obscured during long ages of darkness and oppression, but when here brought to light, they appear all over inscribed with those moral characters which strike the mind, as the light strikes the eye of the newborn infant—a blessed visitation for which it is prepared.

What limit, in time or space, shall we assign to a system so adapted to the universal wants of man?

If paganism, adapted to the impure passions of men, could give life, symmetry and duration to the imperfect civilizations of the extinct empires of the old world, what may we not hope from an order springing out of the universal brotherhood of man, under the recognized Fatherhood of God? Here we find a vital element, which is the sure warrant that this civilization will continue to diffuse itself, till our race shall reach its fullest development. For the first time in its gloomy history, this grand, conserving, vitalizing element is here permitted to develop itself; living by its own intrinsic vitality; everywhere felt in the laws, arts, sciences, forms of thought, and above all, in the whole life of the nation. In every other people that ever raised its head into the historic horizon, this self-sustaining religion has been crippled and perverted by forms of law. By the union of Church and State—a deadly conspiracy against the welfare and happiness of man—our merciful religion has been made his direst curse. And because of the jealous exclusion of a Church from our fundamental forms, we have been called an irreligious nation; though for that very reason, we stand here to-day the most Christian people on earth. Striking commentary! Here its purity, its progress, and its influence, free from the corrupting care of legislation, are all secure, under an enlightened popular guardianship.

Truly, the emergence of these Colonies from British dominion, so moved and so endowed, if not a miracle, is one of the most marvelous, most momentous events in human history. Whether we look to the purity of their motives, the wisdom of their measures, the temperance of their resolution, or to the consummation and consequences of their enterprise, they present the highest claims to the esteem and reverence of mankind. Their perseverance through hardships, their patience in suffering, their unconquerable spirit, their unswerving adherence to their principles, surprise us even more than the wisdom and success of their labors. Reformers of the most radical character, they nowhere betrayed a rash spirit of innovation. All their civil proceedings evince prudence, forecast, acute insight, sound policy, and, above all, a solemn purpose to secure equal and exact justice. With a discriminating eye upon ancient precedents, they entered on a course of reform, at once radical and conservative. And much of their legislation now remains unchanged, after the lapse of two hundred years. Let us contemplate it a moment.

Before leaving their little shallop, the first of these companies had, as we have seen, defined the elements of a new social system: rudimentary truths, whose experimental development was to renew the face of the earth: though they could no more have foreseen it, than a child, watching for the first time the dawning of the day, could foresee its full effulgence. Institutions animated by these elements, and combining in substance all that ages had done for human government, were subsequently organized in the wilderness. For these careful workmen, with no presumptuous disregard of the wisdom of those who had gone before, ascertained, with slow and thoughtful labor, how much of the Common Law of England, their birth-right, was suited to their new condition and wants. The whole Feudal System, in all its parts, was abjured; but the cardinal rights of Magna Charta were recognized at once. Trial by jury was established within three years after the first arrival, and constitutes the appropriate opening to the first chapter of their legislation. It was the policy of the proud aristocracies of Europe, to secure all wealth and power in a few privileged families, by perpetuating great estates through the eldest sons. Our reformers, with righteous boldness, abolished all invidious and slavish tenures, and decreed the distribution of intestate estates among all descendants.

This abolition of primogeniture prevented any dangerous accumulations of property, and effectually forestalled a colonial nobility. A just distribution of the soil secures a wholesome equality of condition. The entailment of estates, long trusts, and other processes for tying up inheritances, were soon broken down, under the enlightening influence of this primitive legislation; which left our landed interests, much as we now find them. It was the monopoly of land by the rich, that caused Rome some of her most fearful convulsions; ending under the power of popular rage, in a distribution of all the lands among the people who had no claim to them. Our far-sighted fathers provided against these evils of agrarianism, by establishing just principles of acquirement, alienation and descent. By her adherence to the old system, by her strange neglect of these lessons of experience, England, our natale solum, is exposing herself, every hour more and more, to revolutionary revolts. Our Colonial lawgivers had the sagacity to see, that by the natural action of the policy through which the British Islands are steadily becoming the private property of a few individuals, all portions of the earth's surface might eventually be so held, and the planet itself lapse at last into private hands.

Scarcely less conspicuous is the wisdom of these Reformers, in their cleansing dealings with criminal jurisprudence. The bloody code of the mother country was completely remodeled and ameliorated. The catalogue of crimes punishable by English law with death, was promptly reduced from one hundred and fifty to eleven! A bold, forward step, unsurpassed by any one act in the whole course of penal legislation. So in all their treatment of the great subject of crimes and punishments, these forest Solons seem to have anticipated the spirit of the Marquis Beccaria, whose humane principles were spread before Christendom in the following century, and have ever since been the vade mecum of criminal law reformers. There is scarcely a change called for in Lord Brougham's famous speech on Law Reforms forty years ago, that has not been found among the enactments of these colonists, and their immediate successors.

But the crowning glory of these master-builders, is their system of Public Instruction. It is the very corner-stone of their matchless work. Education, civil and religious, was held, from their first establishment, to be among the primary duties of society; a matter in which every man felt bound to contribute to the necessities of every other man; as much so as personal protection, public justice, or any other of the more obvious duties of government. Popular instruction was held to be the only safe basis for popular liberty. Society with them was truly, what Burke long after defined it to be, a partnership in all science and in all art, as well as in all virtue, and all perfection.

The Plymouth legislature decreed, among its first measures, that every township of fifty householders should maintain a public school at public expense; and every town of one hundred householders was required to maintain, in like manner, a grammar school, to fit youth for the University; "to the end," says this memorable law, "that learning may not be buried in the grave of our forefathers, in church and commonwealth."

Thus was introduced for the first time among men, a system of free-school instruction for all the people; the principle of which has since been interwoven in a thousand forms, into the very texture of our American institutions. And to this policy we owe more of our national character and prosperity, than to all other causes combined. But the principle, that it is the undoubted right, and the bounden duty of government to provide for the instruction of all its youth, was first established on the Rock of Plymouth. Free-schools are of purely American origin.

Some years before this provision for primary instruction, the sister colony of Massachusetts Bay founded the University of Harvard at Cambridge, for education in the higher branches of learning. No form of speech can more touchingly exhibit the spirit of its founders, than their own account of it:—"After God had brought us safe to New England, and we had builded our houses, provided necessaries for our livelihood, reared convenient places for God's worship, and settled the civil government, one of the next things we longed for, and looked after, was to advance learning, and perpetuate it to posterity." If these sentiments, and these doings, display not high approaches toward moral perfection, then, indeed is human virtue a dream. That people is doomed to ignominy, for whom such men have lived in vain. It would be no compliment to compare them with the sages who adorned Greece in the age of Aristides.

The constructive labors of these original Eastern colonies engage our regard, not merely as the first fruits of the great emigration. They were representative and generative. All their cotemporaries, nerved by their great example to brave the hardships of the hard undertaking, were animated by the same spirit, the same earnest zeal for the promotion of religion, learning and law. Many among them were as distinguished for their love of letters and of science, as for the religious zeal which has been made their reproach. Some of them wore worthily the graceful honors of the renowned Universities, in whose maternal bosoms they were nourished. Within thirty years after the settlement of our own colony, we find the son and co-laborer of its first pastor, himself a graduate of the English Cambridge, as the son was of Harvard, engaged in the work of founding the College which is now the chief glory of Connecticut. And let it never be forgotten on this soil, consecrated by so many memories, that the venerable College of New Jersey, whose services alone would have made the name of our State respectable, abroad as at home, was cradled and nursed into fulness of being, long within the first century of our existence as a colony, through the fostering care and learned labors of one of pastor Pierson's early successors,—the reverend AARON BURR; pronounced by a cotemporary English writer, “one of the master spirits of his age and country.”*

* It is a grateful pleasure to refer, in this connection, to the “Historical

It is among the melancholy instances of human perversity, that a body of men so wise, so elevated in moral dignity, so eminent for public service, so distinguished among the comforting examples in human history of the possibility of human virtue, should be so persistently disparaged for not having been in all things, as they were in most things, superior to their age and kind. Reared in the midst of fierce religious excitements, when the passions of all classes and orders of men, were heated to an intensity now difficult to conceive, they naturally felt their influence. Intolerance, bigotry, and persecution prevailed in all sects and parties ; in every sphere of religion, philosophy and government. The rights of conscience were nowhere recognized on earth. The burning of heretics was justified throughout Europe. The unclean fungus of superstition spawned everywhere under the baleful atmosphere of the time. Belief in witchcraft was all but universal. The Parliament of England solemnly inflicted upon it the punishment of death ; and the penalty was supported and enforced by such respectable jurists as Bacon, Sir Matthew Hale, my Lord Coke, and most other statesmen and philosophers, down to the accomplished Blackstone. Philosophers who could speak soberly on other subjects, Judges who could be impartial in dealing with ordinary crimes, received with unhesitating credulity, the most loathsome tales of the intercourse of men and women with unclean spirits. It was the prevailing habit of the mind, to see in all the agencies and phenomena of nature, supernatural intermeddling. Preternatural terrors exasperated the spirit of the age, which cruelly punished offences existing only in its own frightful reveries. These are among the terrible consequences of converting emotion into dogma.

Discourses relating to the First Presbyterian Church in Newark, by Rev. JONATHAN F. STEARNS, D.D., its present honored pastor; published in 1853, with numerous Historical Notes and Illustrations. A contribution of much value to the general history of the time, its authentic presentation of the spirit, principles and conduct of the fathers of the colony, entitles it to a place in the library of every reader, who has any interest in the history of Newark.

It is a monstrous wrong, to hold any small body of men responsible for not having risen wholly, and at once, above all the shaping influences of their time and education; for not having been able to throw off, at a blow, errors and abuses incorporated in all forms of religion, and made sacred and obligatory to them by the sanction and practice of all Christendom. But their mistakes on this subject have been grossly exaggerated. The weaknesses of great men are ever the consolation of dunces: and hence the clamor of ridicule and abuse. Historians tell us that more heretics were punished in a single county in England, during a single year, than suffered in these colonies during their whole history. There can be found nothing in all their sectarian proceedings, to compare with the inquisitorial minuteness of legislation on men's garments, manners and sports by the Established Church; which enforced her rubrics on pain of imprisonment and death. So slow and reluctant is the progress of reform, that within the memory of men now living, heresy has been punished by fines and imprisonment. And down to about the middle of our own 'enlightened' Nineteenth century, dissenters of every name were excluded from all offices of trust or profit in the United Kingdom. These are mournful proofs of the infirmity of human judgment, even in the best of men; and they may well warn us against the dangers of sectarian zeal, and spiritual presumption.

Caviling critics, who would judge the sun by its spots, in their gratuitous sport with these follies of the wise, fail to see, or love to forget, that out of this inebriety of the times, sprung a reformer who was to restore sobriety, and vindicate religion. An athletic young champion, trained for the great undertaking amidst the heated conflicts of the first Massachusetts colonists, was driven out in the frenzy of the hour, for proclaiming liberty of conscience: for contending that men are amenable to human legislation, not for their religious opinions, but for their conduct and actions alone: that in matters of religious worship, the only law-giver is the Father of spirits, and the only human tribunal, a man's own conscience. To this fortunate banishment; to ROGER WILLIAMS, a name to be pronounced as we pronounce that of Washington, to Roger Williams, the protégé of Coke, the Oxford scholar, the companion and counsellor of Milton, we owe the first Commonwealth ever established on the doctrine of universal religious toleration, since Christianity was usurped by the Cæsars. Calvert before him, and Penn afterward, founded states with toleration for all Christian sects, but Roger Williams opened in Rhode Island the first asylum for all creeds of all nations. "No person within this colony," is the language of its immortal charter, "shall be anywise molested, disquieted, or called in question for any differences of opinion in matters of religion." And thanks to its heroic founder, this is now the settled principle of all American politics. An elder Brewster and a pastor Pierson are enough to hallow any cause, but it is only heroes like Roger Williams who can make it victorious.

Thus were laboriously wrought out through the combined labors of these colonists, the elements of our present harmonious social and political system; a system far, very far surpassing in vital power and comely beauty, any other work of man. There is no danger that we shall exaggerate their claims to our gratitude. This sumptuous festival is the grateful assurance that we appreciate them. Never were colonies formed of such materials; never were colonies so carefully founded on plan and system: no plan or system ever discovered so much wisdom, or was ever crowned with such measureless success.

“Nothing in the history of mankind,”—said the most consummate orator of modern times, in the earliest of his parliamentary orations on the taxation of the colonies, after the British government, incited by their prosperity, usurped the control of them—“nothing in the history of mankind, is like their progress. For my part, I never cast an eye on them, but they seem to me rather ancient nations grown to perfection, through a long series of fortunate events; than the colonies of yesterday; than a set of miserable outcasts, not so much sent as thrown out on the bleak and barren shore of a desolate wilderness, three thousand miles from all civilized intercourse.”

We owe then nothing of our reverence for their services to the fictions of fancy, or the enchantments of Art. It rises spontaneously from a sober contemplation of their means and their ends, their achievements and their lives. Smarting as they were under the cruellist wrongs, the ‘wrath of Achilles’ had no part among the animating motives of these diviner heroes. It was their ambition, not to ‘reign in hell,’ but to ‘serve in heaven.’ Supremely indifferent to human distinctions and applause, they sought no such bad eminence; though they habitually yearned for the glory of 'just men made perfect.' If we, in the light of their better labors, may avoid their errors, who among us would dare to boast of having attained to the height of their virtues? When we follow their story through its moving details; when we see them, in defence of their faith, abandoning their homes and their friends, all things dear to them on earth, submitting to banishment, ignominy and death; courageously suffering sickness and famine on inhospitable shores, in desolation and disaster 'unshaken, unmoved, unterrified,' the soul swells irrepressibly with devout homage, as in presence of the divinest virtue.

Poetry, in all her fond imaginings, has figured nothing so animating as this epic in action. The heroes and demi-gods of the Homeric tale, fade away into the shadows they were, before the substantial forms of these Christian warriors, 'raised to height of noblest temper,' for the deliverance of the oppressed. They disappear from the eye of sense, and the ages silently roll on, but the new dispensation, like another sun risen in the sky, will accompany their course, shedding light and joy among the darkened nations, till heaven and earth rejoice together in the blessed illumination.

"In process eminent, but of true virtue void,"

In the ultimate triumph of this progress

we have the fullest faith; notwithstanding the gloomy portents that sometimes becloud the sky. Even were it an Utopian vision, we should prefer believing the beckoning promise, to accepting the heart-sickening conclusion, that "whatever is, is right." Life would not be worth having, were it certain that the future would be but a counterpart of the past. Our efforts toward progress would be worse than useless were they but foot-prints in the sand. But all American experience forbids the thought. The old world feeds upon remembrances. Ours is the native land of an onward-looking Hope.

GENEALOGICAL NOTICES

OF THE

FIRST SETTLERS OF NEWARK,

BY

SAMUEL H. CONGAR.

PREFATORY REMARKS.

In this contribution to the genealogy of the first settlers of Newark, attentive readers, if descended from them, may possibly find some of their ancestors, if not ignorant of their names. It is the result of investigations among ancient documents and records, and in old cemeteries within the bounds of the original purchase, and in the regions beyond, where, among the pioneers, were sons and daughters of that remarkably plain, simple, sober, praying, orderly and religious people. Imperfect, and sometimes probably incorrect, it remains for those who are not ashamed of such an ancestry to correct and perfect it, and to protect their graves.

The first part relates to the earliest, the second to later settlers. Some abbreviations, made for the saving of space, may need explanation.

a.—for aged; ab.—for about; adm.—for administered; aft.—for after; bapt.—for baptized; b.—for born; bef.—for before; bro.—for brother; bur.—for buried; ch.—for children; des.—descendant; d.—for died; dau.—for daughter; esq.—for judge or justice; ex.—for executor; f.—for father; g. ch.—for grand children; hus.—for husband; m.—for married; n.—for names; neph.—for nephew; prob.—for probably; rem.—for removed; rep.—for representative; sec.—for second; s. in l.—for son-in-law; trad.—for tradition; w.—for will; wi.—for wife; wid.—for widow; w. n. ch.—for will names children. And it is to be remembered that the order of names is not evidence of seniority, and that the first named is not always to be taken for the eldest.

To the most Hono^{red} Gouverno^r of the New Netherlands humble salutacons

Seeing it hath pleased God to order it in his p^ruidence, that a companie of Considerable persons that came into N. E. that they might serve god wth a pure conscience, and enjoy such liberties & priueledges both Civill and Ecclesiasticall as might best aduantage unto, and strenghten them in the end and worke aforesaid, w^{ch} also thorough the mercy of god they haue enjoyed for more then twentie yeares together, and the lord haueing blessed them wth posterities so that their numbers are increased & they being desirous to p^ruide for their posterities so as their outward comfortable subsistence and their soules welfare might in the use of sutable means thorough the blessing of the almightie be attained. In order heerunto they haue appointed some to view some adjacent parts of this American wildernes who haue bin Curteously and encouragingly entertained by yo^r Hono^r w^{ch} the Companie doth acknowl- wth all thankfullnes.—And haue now sent some of our hono^{red} trustie and well beloued friends to wit: Mr Benjamin ffen Mr Robert Treatt Mr Lawes & Deacon Gun, In the name of the committee empowred by the Companie and in y^r behalfe of the Companie, to treat and Conclude as they shall see cause with your hono^r or whom it shall concerne, About the tearmes vpon w^{ch} they may be encouraged to begin to plant, and so from time to time as they are able to proceed yearly by some of themselves and by some of their posteritie or their friends, that may hereafter desire to joine wth them for the enlargem^t of the kingdom of christ Jesus in the Congregationall way, and all other meanes of comfort in subordination heerunto. And seeing that this Designe if sutablely encouraged may hopefully be more for the glory of god and benefitt & welfare of the dutch nation In America, and the hono^r of their principalls in Europe then any yet hath bin by planters vnder their shadow in these parts, The Companie doeth therefore desire that neither any Queries or p'positions made by our honord messengers betruſted and Inſtricted, might be in the leaſt meaſure greuous or offeniue to your hono^r or any Intruſt wth you, for wee are true men and noe ſpies, but to p'uide good righteous and honeſt things for o^r ſelues poſterities and friends like minded, As we haue alreadie for many yeares enjoyed, and are come by theſe our meſſengers to you: And therefore in order to p'poſalls wee deſire that without offence we may haue as plaine and cleare an anſwer as may be to theſe following enquiries and p'positions.

of y^e Comittie impowered
by y^e Company

from Milford Dated this 8th of November 1661 In New england.

[N. Y. Col. MSS., Vol. IX., p. 899.]

Propoſitions agreed upon by the comittie in the name & behalfe of the Companie, to be preſented to the honord Gouverno^r of the New Netherlands by thoſe whoſe names are ſubſcribed.

1. That if a Church or Churches of English ſhall be planted in the places p'pounded they may be allowed by the Authoritie of the high & mightie lords and ſtates Generall of the vnitd p'uinces in the Netherlands in Europe, And wth the app'bation of the Bewindhebers of the Weſt India Companie, to enjoy all ſuch power priueledges and liberties in the congregationall way as they haue enjoyed them in New England aboue twentie yeares paſte, without any diſturbance Impedimⁿ or Impoſitions of any other forms order or cuſtoms to be obſrued by them: And that therein they be allowed and approued churches by ſome publique teſtimonie vpon record.

2. That if the English churches planted vnder the duch gouernement ſhall conſociate together for mutuall helpfulneſſe: They may be allowed by the authority & with the approbation aforesaid ſoe to doe and to call a Synod, and therein to eſtabliſh by comon conſent ſuch orders according to ſcripture as may be requiſite for the ſuppreſſing of heriſies ſchiſmes and false worſhips, and for the eſtabliſhm^t of truth wth peace in thoſe English churches. And that the Gouvernour and Courts at New Amſterdam, ſhall protect the ſaid English Churches and Synods from any that oppoſe them or be Injurious to them.

3. The English planters Doe deſire that they may haue libertie and power by y^e authority and wth y^e app'bation aforesaide to haue the ordering of all Judicature and all their ciuill affaires within themſelues. To chuſe their owne magiſtrates and all other officers, and conſtitute and keepe Courts and make all ſuch lawes and orders as they ſhall finde moſt ſutable to their condition and welfare in that place And that all persons planters and others, for the time they are amongst them within their p'cinets, shall be bound to acquiesce in all their lawes orders sentences and appointm^{ts} of anie of their owne court or courts & officers determinately according to such orders and lawes as are or shall be from time to time agreed upon & enacted by them, and unto all their sentence made & verdicts declared without appeales to any other Authoritie or Jurisdiction. This power the English in America within New England haue had & exercised in all causes by the graunt of the late King of England Charles the first, as is to be seen in his Majesties letters pattent, aboue twentie yeares together. And it is much more necessary that they haue it under the Duch (whose lawes they know not nor understand their language and the way and manner of their exercising this their sole power.) Wee purpose according to the fundamentalls receued in Newhauen Collonie, w^{ch} are in print to be seen (or the most of them) so far as we shall finde it will a like suite christ's ends and our condition there.

4. That all the lands agreed for, as clearly and vndeniably purchased of the Indeans by an Authentick Instrum^t or Instrum^{ts} and that wee may haue one of them in our Custodie, and that the lands of those Indeans that haue y^e naturall and ciuill right be subscribed and soe owned by them in the p'sence of English duch and Indeans as lawfully bought & sould, and that then these lands shall be made y^e pp Inheritans of the English planters and their posteritie for euer by the Authoritie and power wth the approbation aforesaid, accordinge to all p'sent or future orders graunts and agreem^{ts} or deuisions of all such lands so bought as shall be made by the English alone amongst themselues by p'sons Instructed and empowered by them for such affaires.

5. That noe Inhabitants be put upon us by the Duch, but that wee haue the sole power of disposing our lands and entertaining or rejecting all Inhabitants according to agreem^{ts} that shall from time to time be made amongst ourselues.

That the English planters in the aforesaid places, by authoritie and wth approbation aforesaid may haue equall libertie of trading wth the Duch in all respects, they paying all lawful dues and customes as the Duch doe or wth any other whomsoeuer.

Our humble desire is that the p'mises being graunted by those in Holland, or to whom the pattent and power of such graunts appertaineth, may be declared and ratified by an Authentick Instrum^t signed and sealed by the pattentees in Europe if it remains wth them, And that a coppie of it so signed sealed and Authentically Attested may be procured for the English planted vnder the Duch to be by them kept among their publique records for y^e benefit of posteritie.

NOTE C.

[N. Y. Col. MSS., Vol. IX., p. 909.]

Extract outh of the Recordes and Resolutions of the Lord Director Generall and Counsels of the N. Netherlands, taken in their Court Vppon Mooneday the 28th of Novemb^r 1661.

The Director Generall & Counsells off the N. Netherlands haveing perused the Commissione and Propositions, produced by Benjamin Fenn, Robber treat, Rich Lawe, and Jasper gun, Deputies of a greather Companie English People, propounding vppon Certaine termes to be admitted, as inhabbitans and subjects vnder this government, Doe judge the matters off a hevier Consenement as to give soo full & satisfactory answer vppon Every perticull, Nevertheless, Consideringe the aforementioned Deputies are very Desirous to obtain any Answer for to Relate vnto their principals, is Resolved to give this followeing provisionale Answer.

Because there is no difference in the fundamentall poinets of the Worship of god, betwixt these, and the Churches of New England, as onely in the Ruelings of the same—

The Director generall & Counsell doe make noe Dificulte to give way & Consent vnto the two first propositions, because in our Natyff Country, alsoo here, was never practised restraint of Consciencies, in the meane tyme wee wish & hope that by a neerer meeting and Conference betweene oure & their Ministers, further obstructions in this point shall be remoeved and that all Lovinge Vnity shall be observed.

Vppon the Thirth Proposition—vnto the petitioners shall be graunted in the waye of Magistrature, Judicature and sivill affaires, all such power, Authoritie, Priveledge, and Liberty, as all other townes & Collonies of N Netherland have obtained, to wit, the Nomination off their owne majistrates within her selfes yearely in a dubble Number, to be present vnto the Director Generall and Counsell, for to be Elected out of the same the Magistrates for that yeare and to confirme them, the which shall be qualified, with sufficient power & authority for to make, and to see approbated & Confirmed by the Direct^r general & Counsell, all such Ordinances as they shall find good for the benefitt of their townes or plantations, Accordinge to the same, to doe Right and justice, the Appell being Reserved Vnto the high Court, in Conformite of the general Order and Exemption graunted vnto all the Inhabitants of the N Netherlands.

The fourth & Sixt propositions were graunted.

Concerninge the fift proposition, none of the Townes in the N Netherlands are troubled with Inhabitance the which doe not Lyke her or her Magistrates, being reserved that they doe not admitt any Inhabitance without approbation and acknowledgement of the Direct^r generl: & Counsell, and give their Oath for the Affirmation of fidellyty, Thus acted in the fortres named Amsterdam, att the Court kept by the Lord Director generall & Counsell of the N.

NOTE D.

[N. Y. Col. MSS., Vol. X., p. 73.]

Worthy and Lovinge friendes,

Wee doe Conceave that Our Scriptuall Answer, more largely declared by Words of Mouth and mutuall discourses, are such as possibly can be Expected and as is answerabel to our superiors in Europe; it is known (: Honnor and thanks be given for it, to the Bountifull God :) that there is no at the least differency In the fundamentell points off Religion, the differency in Churches orders and government so small that wee doe not stick at it, therefore have left, and Leave it still, to the freedom of your owne Consiences.

In Civil matters which doe not schruppel the Consiency, it is a Common Proverb, in strange places we may finde but must make noe lawes; Conservinge our Common Practis in matters off Civil justice, with your printed orders, we find soo little difference that it wil not hinder the buissenis in hand, Only the Appeale and Confirmation of magistrates out a dubbel Number (: as a token of an acknowledgement, to a higher Authority :) most be Referred to the gouvernour generl & Counsel in tyme beinge, but if the summe where of a party may Appeale, & the feynes before he may Appeale (: beinge Commonly hundert gilders, and the feynes twoe Pound sterlinge :) to your judgement is to smal both may be exalted to a heyer summe.

The Confirmation of Magistrates out a dubbel Number is in several Respects Requisit and needful, more for the good of the townships as for the Authority of the government, the Reasons shortenes sake wee shal deferre to more Convenient tyme & Place. the Common practis of the Governour & Counsel before they Proceed to the Election & Confirmation of the New Magistrates, is to advyse with the deputy of the Old Magistrates Presentinge the nomination before them, which the most fitted men are for that office, where out in part the premises may be deducted.

These two poinctes being amongst your Propositions the Principals, whereabouts at the last meetinge the differancy (to our Remembrance) was left, & the Bearer your Present messenger & agent, John Gregorie, beinge not further Instructed, wee shall breake of for the Present, only wee thought it meete for the furtherance of the matters in hand to acquaint you & those it may Conserne, with the Oath of fidelitty, which in the first place all Inhabitants, secondly all magistrates & military officers every one in his place are to doe: after our love and Respect wee shal Rest.

Your Loving friends

Vppon the Propositions made by the English deputies Roberert treat Philip Groues, and John Gregory, the Governour & Counsel of the N. Netherl^{ds} doe stil Remaine by that answer as formerly in schriptis was given and sent vnto them, and for further Explanation of sum particulars, which they thinck to be doubtfull, this present may serve:

First Conserninge the twoe former Propositions about the Churches orders, and government, wee Referre that vnto themselves, that they not any way shal be molested therein, and if need should Require that advyce should be taken with sum English Ministers, or Churches within these provence of the N. Nederlands, that shall be left to their own liberty. But in case iff a Synod, therevnto most be Required the approbation, and Consent of the governour and Counsel then beinge.

Conserninge the third proposition, the governour & Counsel doe give Consent that the aforesaid English Nation, being setlet vnder this government, shal have power by the most vote of the Churches members, to nominate their owne Magistrates in such a quantity as they shall thincke most meete, and needfull, for their towne or Townes, which Magistrates with the freemen shal be Impowred to make such lawes and Ordinances as occasion shal Require, which lawes & Ordinances after Examination being found not oppugnant to the general lawes of the Vnited Belgick and this Provinces, shal by the Governour & Counsel be Ratified and Confirmed vnto them, Only the Governour & Counsel doe Reserve the Appeals of Criminal and Civil Sentences above the sum of fifty pound sterlinge, Without Reformation or appeale to that sum, for all such inhabitants as therevnto shal subschrybe; and y^e Confirmation of y^e Magistrates out of a dubbel number yearly to be Presented vnto them, out of which dubbel number with advyce or Communication of the Old Magistrates, or their deputies, the following Magistrates, by governour & Counsel then beinge shal be Confirmed.

Conserninge the further propositions were by these presents graunted

[Extract from Despatch to Director Stuyvesant, March 26, 1663.—N. Y. Col. MSS., Vol. XV., p. 7.]

“Thus far we paid our attention to the two letters signed by the Director and Counsellors. The next which claims it, is that of the Director Stuyvesant in particular, in which we observe a petition of some English neighbours, who desired to establish themselves in considerable numbers within the limits of the Company’s jurisdiction, behind Staten-island about the Raritan river, and did see from the annexed documents your Hon’s opinion about it, to which we then make no objection—especially so as this settlement might serve as a bulwark to our nation against the Savages on the Raretan and Menesink, wherefore it should have been gratifying to us, that this proposal had been carried into effect, in which efforts we hope that your Honour shall continue. If we are not mistaken, then the principal obstacle, which retarded its progress, was the appeal in criminal cases and capital crimes of whoredom, adultery and similar offences, which they punish according to the law and the expressed word of God, against which maxim, although the laws of our Fatherland use some connivance in this respect, we make no objection but could not willingly transfer to them the absolute disposal of all criminal cases whatever without appeal; Nevertheless, if the admission and settlement of this nation on that spot is considered so all important to ours, we could permit, to facilitate this negotiation, that no appeals to us should take place in all such crimes, in which the process of the crime is instituted upon a voluntary confession, in which could not be consented in all other cases of a dubious nature, as your honour must apprehend, besides further, that their laws, in punishing all similar crimes against the maxims of our Fatherland, should only be put in practice against their own countrymen—and not against such of our nation, who might settle amongst them. Your Honour must not give up this point, as long it is tenable—it is of too high importance—provided, if the object in view is not obtainable without this sacrifice, then your Honour is authorized to treat with the English on such terms, as in your opinion are best adapted to promote the welfare State and its subjects.”

APPENDIX.

Preliminary and Attendant Circumstances.

At the meeting of the New Jersey Historical Society held in Newark, May 18th, 1865, Mr. W. A. WHITEHEAD offered the following resolution, which was adopted:—

“Resolved, That the Executive Committee, in conjunction with the officers of the Society, be requested to adopt such measures as may be necessary to celebrate in a proper manner in May, 1866, under the auspices of the Society, the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Settlement of Newark; that they be authorized to appoint all necessary sub-committees—to solicit the co-operation of the Common Council of the city, and of the citizens generally, in furtherance of their plans—to issue such invitations as they may deem advisable, and that they report at the next meeting of the Society the progress made in carrying out the wishes and intentions of the Society as herein expressed.”

At the next meeting of the Society, held in Trenton, January 18th, 1866, the Committee reported that

“At a meeting called for the purpose of taking the matter into consideration, the members present were unanimously of the opinion that, while it was highly proper for the Society to suggest, as it had done, the observance of the interesting event by appropriate ceremonies, and co-operate in every way to ensure entire success to whatever plan might be agreed upon, yet it was eminently the province of the City authorities of Newark, in conjunction with the citizens generally, to inaugurate the necessary measures. The Committee, therefore, addressed a communication on the subject to THOMAS B. PEDDIE, Esq., the Mayor, and he very promptly invited the attention of the Common Council to the suggestions made. The Committee are not informed what course that body intend to pursue, but they have felt authorized to pledge the cordial assistance of the Society in carrying out any arrangements that may be devised.”

No arrangements having yet been made by the City authorities when, in April, it became necessary to make preparations for the usual May meeting of the Society, the Officers, after consultation with several prominent members, determined to give to the proceedings at that meeting a Commemorative character, and Committees were appointed to make arrangements accordingly.

The Hon. WM. B. KINNEY was requested to deliver an Oration on the occasion—Mr. WILLIAM A. WHITEHEAD to prepare a Historical Memoir of the Events connected with the Settlement—Dr. THOMAS WARD, of New York, a native of Newark, to read a Poem—and Mr. SAMUEL H. CONGAR to compile Biographical and Genealogical notices of the principal settlers.

The acceptance of their appointments by these gentlemen was followed by the issue of invitations to Corresponding Societies, neighboring towns, and prominent gentlemen of this and the neighboring States, to send representatives or be personally present, in the following form:—

NEW JERSEY HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

NEWARK, April 15th, 1866.

Two hundred years having elapsed since THE SETTLEMENT OF NEWARK, the New Jersey Historical Society propose to commemorate the event by appropriate proceedings at their May meeting.

As NEWARK has been a central point whence have radiated population, intelligence and enterprise over a large portion of the State, its history, from the intimate relations it has with other towns and cities, possesses more than local interest, and it is evidently the duty of the Society, in the absence of a more general celebration, to notice an event which in its consequences has been so momentous.

As the precise day on which the first settlers arrived is not known, THURSDAY, the 17th of MAY, (the usual time for the meeting of the Society,) has been named for the commemoration.

An Oration will be delivered on that day before the Society and its friends, in the First Presbyterian Church in this City, at 3 o'clock, P. M., by the Hon. WILLIAM B. KINNEY, a Poem will be read by THOMAS WARD, Esq., and other suitable proceedings take place.

In behalf of the New Jersey Historical Society, the undersigned requests the pleasure of your attendance on the occasion.

Be pleased to favor me with a reply.

I have the honor to be,

Your Obedient Servant,

W. A. WHITEHEAD.

Corresponding Secretary.

At 2 P. M., on the day designated, the Society having transacted its other business in the morning, the members with their invited guests proceeded from their rooms to the First Presbyterian Church, where the Chair was taken by JOHN RUTHERFURD, Esq., one of the Vice Presidents.

The platform was occupied by many of the Clergy of the City; Hon. MARCUS L. WARD, Governor of the State, and Staff; THOMAS B. PEDDIE, Esq., Mayor of the City; the Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT, the Hon. JOHN R. BRODHEAD, the Hon. CHARLES P. KIRKLAND, and JAMES W. BEEKMAN, Esq., representatives of the New York Historical Society; HORATIO GATES JONES, Esq., JOHN A. McALLISTER, Esq., J. SIMPSON AFRICA, Esq., representatives of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania; ERASTUS SMITH, Esq., from the Historical Society of Connecticut; J. H. SHEPPARD, Esq., of the Historic Genealogical Society of Massachusetts; NATHANIEL PAINE, Esq., of the American Antiquarian Society; E. A. APGAR, Esq., State Superintendent of Public Instruction; Professor G. H. COOK, of Rutgers College, and other distinguished citizens.

On one side of the platform was a large map of the Town as first laid out, with colors and figures designating the owners of the different lots, whose names were inscribed on a corresponding canvas on the other side.

Dr. SAMUEL H. PENNINGTON, Chairman of the Executive Committee, conducted the exercises of the afternoon, which were commenced with an appropriate prayer by the Rev. JONATHAN F. STEARNS, D. D., Pastor of the Church.

An Ode for the occasion, written by Dr. ABRAHAM COLES, having been distributed through the audience, was then generally sung, to the tune of "Lenox"—as follows:

THE ODE.

Our fathers' God we bless,
We magnify and sing
Th' abundant faithfulness
And mercy of our King

To us, and them whose hands did sow
These fields Two Hundred Years Ago.

O fair the heritage
They from the red man gained—
Passing from age to age
The title all unstained:
Good men and true they were, we know,
Who lived Two Hundred Years Ago.

This City, nobly planned,
Adorned with park and shade,
Their tasteful eye and hand
The first foundations laid:
Men fearing God they were, we know,
Who built Two Hundred Years Ago.

Though slumb'ring in the ground—
Their spirit walks abroad,
In schools and workshops found
And temples of our God:
What they did plant God made to grow,
E'er since Two Hundred Years Ago.

O River, smiling near!
And blue Sky overhead!
The same from year to year—
Ye do not mourn the Dead;
The Dead who left this scene of woe
For heaven, Two Hundred Years Ago.

The memory of the Just
Thrice blessed is—and sweet
Is their neglected dust
We tread beneath our feet:
Unfilial feet to trample so
Dust of Two Hundred Years Ago.

Thrice has a righteous sword
Been drawn in Freedom's cause—
Done battle for the Lord—
For equal rights and laws;
Fraternal blood been made to flow
Ah! since Two Hundred Years Ago.

What wonders God has wrought!
Then let us warble forth
His love beyond our thought,
His majesty and worth—
Exalt His power and grace below
Like those Two Hundred Years Ago.

The Historical Memoir—the Poem—and Oration, followed in order, and were succeeded by Sternhold and Hopkins' version of the Hundredth Psalm, sung by the whole congregation standing:

PSALM C.

All people that on earth doe dwell,
Sing to the LORD with cheareful voyce,
Him serue with feare, his praise forth-tell,
Come yee, before him and rejoyce.

The LORD, yee know, is God indeed,
With'out our aide hee did vs make;
Wee are his flocke, hee doth vs feede,
And for his sheepe he doeth vs take.

Oh, enter then his gates with praise,
Approach with joy his courtes vnto,
Praise, laude, and blesse his Name alwayes:
For it is seemly so to doe.

For why ? the Lord our God is good,
His mercie is for euer sure,
His trueth at all times firmly stood,
And shall from age to age indure.

The benediction was then pronounced by the Rev. J. FEW SMITH, D. D., Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church.

In the evening the rooms of the Society were thrown open, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, a large company, comprising the members of the Society, their families, friends and invited guests, assembled to partake of a collation and enjoy the music and dancing that added to the festive character of the occasion; the Trustees of St. John's Lodge, whose beautiful rooms adjoin those of the Society, throwing them open also, to contribute to the pleasantness of the evening.

Synopsis of Letters Received.

From HON. JOHN G. PALFREY, dated Boston, April 7th, 1866, regretting that official and other engagements would prevent his attending the celebration.

From E. E. BOURNE, Esq., President of the Maine Historical Society, dated Kennebunk, April 10th, 1866, stating that the Hon. John A. Poor, of Portland, and Hon. Charles S. Gillman, of Brunswick had been appointed to represent the Society. Mr. Bourne wrote :

EXTRACT.—“It would have been exceeding pleasant to myself, to have united with you, in this commemoration. But my present engagements preclude me from so doing. I look upon it, as well as upon others of like character, as one of the most efficient means of promoting historical knowledge; a true and generous philanthropy, and a sound reliable patriotism. Many will be awakened to an enquiry into the historical facts, which will, probably, for the first time, come home to their knowledge. The Popham celebration in this State, has done more to lead the minds of our citizens to the study of the early occupation and settlement of Maine, than any one measure that could have been devised.” * * * * *

“Your city, as well as the boroughs around you, started into being under the most favorable auspices. Their founders were men of true nobility of soul; solid men; who fully comprehended the principles and obligations of an enlightened civilization; who were cognizant of the rights of humanity, and who regarded a strict adhesion to them, as the only basis of successful enterprise. The fertility of your soil, and your maritime privileges could not fail in giving speedy physical strength to your early settlement. So that those who nursed it in the first years of its existence, as one historian at the time well said, were “a sober and industrious people, and have the necessary provisions for themselves and families, and for the comfortable entertainment of strangers and travelers.” That is a high recommendation for any plantation, borough or city. Plenty to eat and plenty to drink, in my view, are very great helps to a vigorous intellect, a sound morality, and successful enterprise; and more especially must communities so favored have presented strong attractions to the men of New England, who flocked there to aid you in giving an impetus to the settlement of Newark. Hospitality we are accustomed to reckon as one of the noblest of virtues, especially so when manifested by others toward ourselves.

“But the moral influences of your celebration are perhaps more valuable than its historic. For ages past the earth has been but an arena for political and religious sectarianism, whereby strife, ill-humor and dissension have been engendered and nourished—and the progress of an enlightened civilization woefully impeded. Our party conventions, whether civil or religious, are instituted to establish marked, firm barriers against all whose opinions do not accord with our own. Such are cut off from our sympathies. But there can be no such unholy element in these historic gatherings. We meet as those of one great household; as inheritors of a common country, with a common interest in everything which pertains to its history. There are no party purposes to be subserved—no individual ambitions to be ministered to. Old friendships are here renewed and new ones formed. We do something towards making life over again and bringing back to our souls the noble, genial feeling of the brotherhood of man.

“But these occasions are well fitted to inspire our souls with a noble patriotism. Just in proportion as we become familiar with the men and events of the past, and acquaint ourselves with the agencies which have wrought out our own advancement and happiness, or which have prospered and built up our city and country, we become identified with them, and our attachments become strengthened and confirmed. We love the places where have originated, and the men who have carried forward the enterprises which have given us a commendable standing among the communities of the country. We are in continual need of inspirations from such sources, to urge us onward to worthy action. The pride of town or country ambition for the preeminence, is a powerful stimulant to human activity. Your people will learn on this occasion, much to create a new interest in the prosperity and growth of your city. They may hear to whom they are indebted for its present status; for the regular location of your streets; for its squares; its magnificent elms; its grand broad avenue; its elegant Court House; its various factories, &c., and thus be impressed with their obligations to honor the memory of its benefactors, by giving themselves with new energy, to carry forward works which have been so successfully begun. Men who are made to love their homes by the interesting memories which cluster about them, will love the country in which they are embosomed.

"I believe your celebration will be a profitable occasion to your people; and I trust as out of the ark of old, built for the purpose, under the guidance of infinite wisdom, went forth man and all living creatures to replenish the earth, so shall continue to go forth from your Newark, men of sound principles, enlightened intellect and true patriotism, to aid in giving strength and durability to all our free institutions."

From EDWARD S. RAND, Jr., Esq., Recording Secretary of the New England Historic Genealogical Society, dated Boston, May 2d, 1866, communicating the acceptance of the invitation of the Society and appointment of Dr. Winslow Lewis, Hon. George B. Upton, John H. Sheppard, Esq., and William H. Whitmore, Esq., as delegates.

From FREDERIC DE PEYSTER, Esq., President of the New York Historical Society, dated New York, May 2d, 1866, communicating the election of Gulian C. Verplanck, George Bancroft, Hamilton Fish, James W. Beekman, Sam. L. M. Barlow, Charles P. Kirkland, and John Romeyn Brodhead, as representatives of the Society at the celebration.

From His Excellency MARCUS L. WARD, Governor of the State, dated Trenton, May 3d, 1866, accepting the invitation of the Society to be present.

EXTRACT.—"By birth, residence, association and business, I have always been identified with our city, and I claim, as a high honor, an ancestor among those who two hundred years ago laid its foundations deep and strong. Their monuments are all around us, in the wide and spacious streets and public parks which adorn the city. Its growth has been wonderful, but the character, the intelligence, the christian zeal of its founders were a guarantee of its prosperity. To their descendants has been joined a population full of attachment to republican liberty, regarding education as the safeguard of the people, and proving by their enterprise and public spirit that they are worthy residents of a city thus founded. That its future growth and prosperity will equal its past I do not doubt, and I trust that that growth and prosperity may go hand in hand with its progress in every great and good work."

From Professor JOHN S. HART, LL.D., Principal of the State Normal School, and Professor EDGAR A. APGAR, State Superintendent of Public Schools, dated severally, Trenton, May 3d, 1866, accepting the invitation of the Society.

From S. F. HAVEN, Esq., dated Worcester, Mass., May 4th, 1866, regretting his inability to be present, as he was "about leaving the country for a short tour abroad."

From WM. DUANE, Esq., of Philadelphia, dated May 4th, 1866, acknowledging the invitation of the Society.

From ALONZO HILL, Esq., Recording Secretary of the American Antiquarian Society, dated Worcester, May 4th, 1866, certifying to the appointment of the Hon. Ira M. Barton and Nathaniel Paine, Esq., as its representatives at the celebration.

From JAMES LENOX, Esq., of New York, dated May 5th, 1866, acknowledging the invitation of the Society, which it would be impossible for him to accept.

From JOHN WINGATE THORNTON, Esq., of Boston, dated May 7th, 1866, acknowledging the invitation of the Society.

EXTRACT.—“ * * * Very much regret that professional engagements forbid me the pleasure of being present.

“Frequent recurrences to the initials of our country are of great general value, as well as of local interest, for they tend to bring into view the various sources and elements of our national character—the study of philosophers and the key of our National History.

“They show perils escaped, sometimes by the grace of God, sometimes by the inherent weakness of the actors and of their designs. The ever-strengthening community of interests and sentiment between all parts of the great Republic will in time resolve our many races into one nationality—‘a peculiar people.’ The graceless Duke of York, about two centuries ago, vainly sought, for despotic ends, to merge some of our Northern Colonies into one government, but God, in his own time, joined us in the genial brotherhood of freedom.

“There are many pleasant ties between New Jersey and New England. The names of Belcher,—perhaps the most accomplished gentleman, and preeminently one of the best of the sons of Massachusetts,—and of Edwards, the patrons of learning and religion, will be loved and venerated while Princeton stands, and while the memory of her noble old Puritan son, McWhorter of Newark, is cherished by the good and great.”

From ISAAC S. MULFORD, M.D., of Camden, dated May 7th, 1866, acknowledging the invitation of the Society, and regretting that the state of his health and other circumstances would prevent his being present.

From HON. JOHN ROMEYN BRODHEAD of New York, dated May 7th, 1866, accepting the invitation of the Society.

From RICHARD W. STITES, Esq., of Morristown, and JOHN PENNINGTON, Esq., of Philadelphia, dated severally, May 8th, 1866, acknowledging the invitations of the Society.

From REV. GEORGE H. DOANE, of Newark, dated May 8th, 1866, accepting the invitation of the Society.

From JAMES ROSS SNOWDEN, Esq., Corresponding Secretary of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, dated Philadelphia, May 8th, 1866, communicating the certificate of Richard Eddy, Esq., Secretary of the Executive Council, that Messrs. John William Wallace, Edward Armstrong, Ferdinand J. Dreer and Horatio Gates Jones had been appointed delegates from the Society to attend the celebration.

From HON. WILLIAM WRIGHT, dated Newark, May 9th, 1866, acknowledging the invitation of the Society, and regretting that the state of his health would not admit of his being present on the occasion.

From Mr. CHARLES O. TICHENOR, of Appleton, Wisconsin, dated May 9th, 1866, regretting that as a descendant of David Tichenor, one of the original settlers, he could not be present in accordance with the invitation of the Society.

From GEORGE HANNAH, Esq., Librarian of the Long Island Historical Society, dated Brooklyn, May 9th, 1866, communicating the names of Messrs. J. Carson Breevort, Charles S. West, Thomas W. Field, Alden J. Spooner and John Winslow as those of the appointed delegates from that Society.

From Rt. Rev. J. ROOSEVELT BAILEY, Bishop of Newark, dated

May 10th, 1866, regretting that official duties prevented his acceptance of the Society's invitation.

From JOHN R. BARTLETT, Esq., of Providence, dated May 10th, 1866, acknowledging the receipt of the Society's invitation.

From S. L. WARD, M. D., of Belleville, Hon. MARTIN RYERSON, of Newton, Rev. J. FEW SMITH, D.D., of Newark, and GEORGE H. MOORE, Esq., Librarian of the New York Historical Society, dated severally May 10th, 1866, accepting the invitations of the Society.

From G. DEWITT, Esq., of Belleville, dated May 10th, 1866, communicating the names of delegates from that town, comprising Rev. P. A. Studdiford, Dr. S. L. Ward, Dr. D. M. Skinner, Rev. D. R. Lowrie, Rev. M. Sayres, and Messrs. Wm. Jackson, Samuel H. Terry, Andrew Little, L. D. Baldwin, T. W. Satterthwaite, Hugh Holmes, James B. Hervey and G. DeWitt.

From Rev. D. W. POOR, D.D., of Newark, dated May 11th, 1866, acknowledging the receipt of the invitation of the Society.

EXTRACT.—“I regret to say, that previous engagements abroad, will prevent my attendance on the occasion. I say this, as no mere matter of form—Newark is my adopted city. I have spent here just seventeen years of my manhood, and have honestly endeavored to contribute what in me lay, towards the promotion of its moral and spiritual welfare. In so doing I have learned to love it as my proper home, and have watched its rapid growth with an honest pride. Since my residence here it has nearly trebled its population, multiplied its schools and churches in still greater proportion, and developed a varied and energetic life which promises a vast increase in the future.

“It is my earnest desire that as she breaks forth and enlarges on every side, she may be saved from those fearful evils which are the curse of our great cities, and this can only be done through the wise liberality of her citizens, contributing to the establishment of those institutions of religion and learning, which are the true guardians of our peace and the only sure guarantees of our prosperity.

“Allow me here to express the hope that this celebration may serve to strengthen in the hearts of her people, a fervent love for her welfare and give a fresh impulse to all the movements that are going on towards making her the very foremost city in the State, distinguished for everything that constitutes the honor and the glory of a free, self-regulated commonwealth.

“Hoping that your excellent Society will long continue to prosecute its invaluable labors and do much towards transmitting the spirit of the fathers unto the children, I have the honor to be, &c.”

From Rev. JOEL PARKER, D.D., Newark, dated May 11th, 1866, regretting that attendance on the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church would prevent his being present.

From ASHER TAYLOR, Esq., of New York, dated May 11th, 1866, acknowledging the invitation of the Society.

From Rev. JAMES P. WILSON, D.D., of Newark, Professor GEORGE H. COOK, State Geologist and Rev. EDGAR M. LEVY, D.D., of Newark, dated severally May 11th, 1866, accepting the invitations of the Society.

From Hon. IRA C. WHITEHEAD, of Morristown, dated May 11th, 1866, communicating the names of Messrs. William C. Baker, Alfred Mills and John F. Voorhees as representatives from that place at the celebration.

From Rev. EDWIN F. HATFIELD, D. D., of New York, dated May 12th, 1866, regretting, as a descendant of Lewis Swaine, Sergeant Harrison, and John Ward, Sen'r, that he could not be present on the occasion.

From THOMAS W. SATTERTHWAITE, Esq., of Belleville, Rev.

LEWIS R. DUNN, of Newark, Rev. WM. B. BROWN, of Newark, Mr. GEORGE WURTS, of Paterson, Rev. JONATHAN F. STEARNS, D. D., of Newark, Rev. SAMUEL IRENEUS PRIME, D. D., of New York, and Rev. WM. H. CAMPBELL, D. D., of New Brunswick, dated severally May 11th, 1866, all accepting the Society's invitations.

From HORATIO GATES JONES, Esq., of Philadelphia, dated May 14th, 1866, intimating his intention to be present with the Hon. John William Wallace, as two of the representatives from the Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

From Rev. H. N. BRINSMADE, D. D., of Newark, and E. B. O'CALLAGHAN, M. D., of Albany, dated severally May 14th, 1866, acknowledging the invitations of the Society.

From H. N. CONGAR, Esq., Secretary of the State of New Jersey, dated Trenton, May 14th, 1866, accepting the invitation of the Society.

From Dr. WILLIAM PIERSON, of Orange, dated May 14th, 1866, furnishing the names of the delegates from Orange: Messrs. Edward Ensign, (Mayor,) Nelson Lindsley, John C. Bailey, Wm. H. Vermilye, David N. Ropes, Edward D. Pierson, David Beach, Charles A. Lighthipe, Stephen Tichenor, Jesse Williams, Edwin Gray, J. J. Everitt, George Kingsley, N. H. Stockwell, Jacob Halsted, Peter Gerbert, Andrew Britton, Thomas Root, William Pierson, M. D.

From Hon. L. Q. C. ELMER, of Bridgeton, dated May 15th, 1866, acknowledging the invitation of the Society.

From GEORGE T. COBB, Esq., of Morristown, dated May 15th, 1866, accepting the invitation of the Society.

From J. HAMMOND TRUMBULL, Esq., President of the Connecticut Historical Society, stating that Erastus Smith, Esq., of Hartford, His Excellency Governor Joseph R. Hawley, and Charles J. Headley, Esq., had been appointed to attend the celebration as delegates of the Society.

From Rev. E. H. GILLETT, of Harlem, dated May 16th, 1866, acknowledging the receipt of the Society's invitation.

From Hon. JOHN H. POOR, dated Washington, May 16th, 1866, regretting his inability to be present as a representative of the Historical Society of Maine.

EXTRACT.—“Apart from the local and personal interest which attaches to a public celebration of the anniversary of the founding of a City or a State,—like that you now observe,—there is a public advantage in these occasions from the influence they must exert in inspiring and developing a love of historic knowledge, which has in every age been regarded as the most valuable of intellectual attainments. The desire to know what has taken place among men before we were called to share the responsibilities of civil society, and to understand the nature and extent of civil obligations, as understood among men, what is sometimes called “the historic sense,” is the great feature that distinguishes civilized from savage life, and raises individuals and nations in the scale of humanity. The greatness of nations is to be measured by the truth and grandeur of their ideas.

“The growth and development of the great American Republic, will render more and more interesting year by year, the events of its earliest history, and the trials and labors through which our institutions received shape and proportions. While it is claimed for MAINE, that the earliest successful efforts of our race for the establishment of its power in the New World, were upon its shores, and the first ideas of independence openly asserted,—NEW JERSEY was the battle-field of the Revolution,—the theatre of the most stirring scenes of the War of Independence,—that gave to the world the great Republic. A common interest and a mutual sym, pathy, will tend to make all who reside, in different communities and separated States, more and more one people, as occasions, like that you celebrate to-morrow, bring to us better knowledge of the past and of each other."

From Miss S. M. BROWNSON, dated Elizabeth, May 16th, 1866, stating that imperative absence prevented the acceptance by her father, Dr. Brownson, of the Society's invitation.

From Hon. JOHN C. TEN EyCK, of Mount Holly, dated May 17th, 1866, acknowledging the receipt of the Society's invitation.

From Hon. ROBERT C. WINTHROP, President of the Massachusetts Historical Society, dated Boston, May 24th, 1866.

EXTRACT.—"I write to apologise for a seeming neglect. Your kind invitation of the 15th ult. reached me just as I was taking the cars for a journey, from which I have but recently returned. I left the letter to be communicated to our Historical Society at their May meeting, and it was so done in my absence. The invitation was gratefully received, and a hope expressed that some one or more of our members might find it convenient to be at Newark on the 17th. But I learn that no one attended, and that no answer to the invitation has been sent.

"I pray your Society to accept, even at this late day, the grateful acknowledgments of the Massachusetts Historical Society for the invitation, and to excuse the accidental delay in communicating them.

"It would have given me personally and officially great pleasure, had it been in my power, to attend the celebration and to listen to the address of my friend, Mr. Kinney."

Proceedings of the City Authorities.

At a meeting of the Common Council, held on April 7th, a Resolution was adopted directing the appointment of a Committee to confer and co-operate with the Historical Society in the arrangement for the public observance of the day; and at a subsequent meeting, on the 20th April, that committee was made to consist of Aldermen Peters, Hays and Joy.

On the 4th May the Committee reported to the Council the arrangements made, and submitted the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That His Honor, the Mayor, be requested to issue a proclamation, requesting from the citizens a general suspension of business, in order to have the day more especially devoted to testifying their appreciation of the founders of the city.

Resolved, That His Excellency, the Governor and his Staff, the Judiciary, Members of the Bar, the Mayor and Common Council of the City of Newark, the Fire Department, the various military organizations and the civic societies generally, are earnestly requested to unite with the New Jersey Historical Society in celebrating the day.

Resolved, That the sum of six hundred dollars be and is hereby appropriated to the Special Committee for carrying the above into effect.

In accordance with the suggestion of the Committee, on the 9th May, the following proclamation was issued by the Mayor:

THE BI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

PROCLAMATION BY THE MAYOR.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEWARK, May 9, 1866.

WHEREAS, the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the settlement of the city of Newark will occur on the 17th inst., upon which day the Common Council have agreed to unite with the New Jersey Historical Society in celebrating the event; and

WHEREAS, it is eminently proper on such an occasion that we should desist from our daily avocations, and honor the men who, under the blessing of God, and through privations and suffering, and by industry and energy, planted the tree the golden fruits of which we enjoy to-day;

Therefore, I, THOMAS B. PEDDIE, Mayor of the city of Newark, do hereby direct that the public offices be closed on Thursday, the 17th inst., and I recommend that the day be observed as a public holiday, that the people may unite in the said celebration, and that we may show our appreciation of the character and virtues of the noble band of Christian men and women who founded our beautiful and prosperous city.

THOMAS B. PEDDIE, Mayor.

GEORGE PETERS,
JAS. L. HAYS,
CHARLES JOY,
Committee of Common Council.

Colonel JOS. W. PLUME, Grand Marshal.

The morning of the 17th proved to be stormy and so unpropitious that it was deemed impracticable to conform to the above arrangements, but later in the day, the weather becoming less unfavorable, they were carried out to some extent.

"THE PARADE," said the Daily Advertiser of the 18th May, "although not so complete as it would have been had the weather been fine and the first arrangements carried out, attracted the usual crowds of observers who lined the sidewalks on the route of the procession and occupied the windows and roofs of the houses. Flags flying from a hundred staffs and draped from windows and balconies, and handkerchiefs waving from fair hands everywhere made the scene one of unusual animation.

The military display, notwithstanding the absence of the Second Regiment from the lines, through misunderstanding as to the postponement of the parade, was very fine, many compliments having been bestowed upon the martial bearing and tasteful appearance of the troops. Co. A, City Cavalry, formed the advance and was followed by the Newark City Battery, State

Rifle Corps, with two brass pieces of artillery. The 1st Regiment, N. J. State Rifle Corps, was under the command of Colonel Peckwell—and although they received orders at a late hour to assemble at their armories, nearly every company had its full complement of men. Preceding the 1st Regiment was a mounted cavalcade of citizens. The Fire Department, as usual upon such occasions, received their full share of praise.

A number of characteristic devices were displayed on the steamers and trucks, and Hook and Ladder No. 2 was tastefully adorned with plumes and starry banners. All six of the steamers, (including the new one,) were polished and brightened up in magnificent style. At intervals throughout the line delegations from the old hand engine companies, recently disbanded, appeared, and also the wagons of several manufacturing establishments gaily adorned with flying colors. Four bands furnished admirable music. Columbia Lodge, I. O. of O. F., No. 117, with a banner, and several private carriages closed the procession. The parade was made through several streets, and returned to Military park at about five o'clock P. M., and was dismissed."
